"Little girls are best off at home."

"Ain't mammas too?"

Mamma paused, but did not reply. Nor did she forget the little eyes looking up into hers as she went on again with her wraps.

"I wish I had two mammas, so—"

"So what, darling?"

"So I wouldn't have to stay alone so much."

"But nurse is here," and mamma went down to papa.

"Goodby, kitten," papa called up the stairway.

"Goodby" came the little voice, but then papa and mamma couldn't see the little face and the tears on the lashes.

"Come up to bed now," nurse said as Jennett finished her simple supper.

But the little eyes could not stay shut, and the little heart so "pained" for mamma.

Down stairs was some one who wanted to see nurse, so she fell back on her old mode.

"Now shut your eyes quick and go to sleep or a big, black dog will come out of the closet and bite you."

Closed were the little eyelids now, nor did they tell of the hurried beatings of a timid heart under the counterpane. Not a muscle moved and nurse's duty was done.

But for hours it seemed to the lonely little girl did she wait and fear the ugly dog.

"Such flushed cheeks," and mamma called papa into the room after they were home again.

"Covered too warm," papa thought as he kissed the rosy mouth. "You had better caution nurse about it."

"Do you s'pose papa will get another ittle girl if I is sick?"

It was morning, and mamma was trying to have Jennett eat her oatmeal.

"Why?"

"Cause, I can't eat it, but"—

"No, no, darling. Papa wants only you." Glad little eyes watched her mother's face—but then—papa had said that.

The little girl was herself again in a few days, her naughty self too, one morning, as papa went off after another little girl, so he said.

"No, he's alone," and Jennett turned from the window where she had been so long.

"Who is, pet?"

"Papa," and his step was in the hall.

"Where—is she, papa?"

"Where is whom?"

"The other little girl."

"Oh, down town."

The little girl down town became as real to Jennett as the president is to us. They were not bad parents, oh, no, only thoughtless and ignorant of the longing of a little heart.

"Mamma is going down town, Jennett," said Mrs. Summers one day.

"Please, may I go too?"

"No, no; Mrs. Allen goes with mamma," she answered rather impatiently. "You can go with nurse for a walk."

"Is you going to see papa's little girl?" and the lips quivered.

"Oh, you foolish child, no," and Mrs. Summers laughed. But Jennett only turned to the window and was so quiet, so very quiet that her mother came up and looked out to see what her daughter saw.

"What is it, Jennett?"

No answer, and the little form was lifted onto her lap.

"Why, darling, what is it? And you are surely crying. What for?"

"I wish—I wish you would ever let me go too. I want to see papa's"—

"Now, my dear, don't think of that. You could go, but nurse is willing to care for you, and you can go to the park."

"Yes, but I love you best." Mrs. Summers paused—but there—no, Jennett must not go this time, for they were to call on some very fashionable friends that day.

"I will tell you. Stay with nurse, and I will bring you a baby doll all dressed in long clothes," and Jennett slid down happy.

The moment passed, and mamma was home again. At the hall door was Jennett eagle for her doll.

"Oh, that's so, I forgot to stop, dearie, but never mind. See, papa wants a kiss." She had a lovely time and told Mr. Summers all about it. Jennett ate nothing, and nurse put her to bed. In the night both parents were awakened by a choking cough—a cough once heard never to be forgotten.

When the doctor came he said it was croup in its surest form and little hope remained. "What can I do?" the mother cried. And then she thought of her mother and her mother's God. She could pray! And she went into her own room and then told her Lord all about it. With it all came a sense of her own unworthiness, her estrangement from God and her perfect ignorance in training a little child. She arose from her knees, but not comforted—only sustained—with such a flood of accusing memories. By and by Jennett lay in her mother's arms, greatly relieved if not out of danger. She looked up at her mother's tearful face and said:

"Oh, don't cry, mamma. I is better," and then fell asleep, to wake every few moments with half confused memories. It was agony to both parents to catch the half whispered words and know what impressions the little mind had of late received. Now it was the new dolly coming to her when mamma came, then "papa's girl" was sick, and papa held her instead of her own little daughter. "Oh, but she must not die!" Mrs. Summers cried in agony. Her voice awakened Jennett.

"If I do, mamma, you can have papa's girl," she said so quietly that her words fell like a voice from another world on the guilty hearts of her parents.

"I have no other girl, darling," her father replied. "I only told you so in fun. I love no one but you."

"But you said so, papa—always."

And Mr. Summers could not meet the trusting gaze.

"But it was only a joke, Jennett. We only want you, only you," and the tears splashed down on the hot cheeks as mamma bent over her.

And seeming satisfied the little eyes closed again.

"It was all wrong, Emma," said Mr. Summers looking up. "If she believes, we should tell her no untruth, or we'll shake her faith in everything good."

"I am so sorry I forgot her doll." But the excuse did not bring relief this time. "We have been thoughtless and"—

"Cruel, Emma," and his voice, trembling, ceased. They sat in silence a long time, each absorbed in painful reflections. At last Mrs. Summers knelt by Jennett's side.

"Husband, before God I promised to never tell anything untrue or deceive her in any other way. If he will save her unto us, I will make her education and happiness my care and never forget how near she was to leaving us." She laid her hand upon his knee, and he placed his over it and said, "Amen and amen."

Just the comfort of confession seemed to bring such peace that both felt their vow was heard, even through their darling left them. Mrs. Summers never did anything by halves. Nurse was seen and confessed to her mode of frightening the child into obedience, and now she confessed to letting the child play in the water while she was visiting with a friend, "and if I had staid with her or taken her," Mrs. Summers reflected. "Ah, I almost forgot a mother's place." But Jennett soon found that her mother was a very kind mamma to think so much of her, and never again did she hear of "papa's girl." It was a lesson which only needed attention to learn, and their attention was called in His own way.—Minneapolis Tribune.

ONE OF JAPAN'S JEWELS.

The great attraction of Kamakura, and one of the jewels of Japan, is the Daibutsu, or great bronze Buddha. We approach it through a three lined avenue and get the first and best view of it at a distance of some 200 feet. It is a sittting figure, 49 feet 7 inches high, 97 feet 2 inches in circumference. The face is 8 feet 5 inches long, and from ear to ear 17 feet 9 inches wide. The eyes, which are pure gold, are nearly 2 feet long. The circumference of the thumb is 3 feet. These figures give some idea of the size, and the figure is elevated on a stone platform some 12 to 15 feet above the person approaching it. But no description can convey an idea of the majesty of the face. It is bent gently forward as if in brooding contemplation of the infinite. It represents perfect peace—the repose of the attained Nirvana.—Boston Herald.

Spin Cheerfully.

Spin cheerfully,
Not tearfully,
Though wearily you plod;
Spin carefully,
Spin prayerfully,
But leave the thread with God.

The shuttles of His purpose move
To carry out His own design.
Seek not too soon to disaprove
His work, nor yet assign
Dark motives, when with silent dread
You view each somber fold;
For lo, within each darker thread,
There twines a thread of gold.

Spin cheerfully,
Not tearfully,
He knows the way you plod;
Spin carefully,
Spin prayerfully,
But leave the thread with God.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

Arrangement of Flowers.—In selecting your seed it is not wise to select packages of mixed seeds in flowers where the several varieties have colors that are not harmonious; like the phlox, for instance, which has scarlet, mauve, and magenta colors, which would be hideous should they chance to come up side of each other. It is better to select packages in which each color is kept by itself, then, in planting a bed of the different kinds of the same flower, you can arrange the colors tastefully. This principle holds good also when you are planting different flowers in the same bed. Study the height, size, habits, foliage and colors of the flowers you wish to raise, and arrange them as harmoniously as possible. The catalogues often give useful hints.

I remember a farmhouse not far away in Worcester county, that I used occasionally to ride by in my childhood, and I shall never forget the delight with which I gazed upon the well-kept flower beds. There were beds under the eaves close up to the house; there were circular beds on the lawn and beds on either side of the paths; but what most excited my childish enthusiasm was the beds along the walls by the roadside. I remember the stately dahlias, the brilliant gladioluses, the tangles of sweet peas, the profusion of calliopsis, the delicate larkspur, all with colors so perfectly harmonized, and with the arrangement with regard to each other so artistic that the impression of that wayside farmhouse upon the memory is similar to the impression of the grandest music, the finest paintings, the most beautiful poems. The maker of the flower beds was not a gardener, only a girl who was a natural artist in color, a natural florist in the arrangement of flowers.

Planning the Summer Gardens.—Under this title, Mr. Eben Rexford has an article full of useful advice in the April number of the Ladies' Home Journal. Here are some of the "don'ts" he would have you regard.

"Don't make elaborate plans when you are doubtful of your ability to carry them forward to success."

"Don't undertake more than you can easily do."

"Don't attempt to have everthing that is worth growing in your garden. Select a few of the best. Quality should be considered, not quantity."

"Don't imitate anyone else's garden; be original."

"If you have never had a garden and do not fully understand the demands it will make upon your time and labor, start out in a conservative way. Have a small one this year, and next year have a larger one if the success this year encourages you to attempt it."

"Never allow the design of a bed to give you more concern than what to put in it. As a general thing fanciful beds are to be avoided. Unless they are given a deal of attention they are unsatisfactory. Aim to have beds of pleasing shape, but let these shapes be simple and in keeping with the habit and character of the plants to be grown in them."

"Circular or oval beds are suited to prominent locations, because tall plants may be grown in the center, smaller ones about them, and low growers at the edge, giving an effect which is pleasing from all points of view. Circular or curving beds are more satisfactory than straight or square ones. If you are not very particular about the shape of your bed, but want something easy to work in, a long, narrow one will suit you best. If you have wide beds that are to be seen from the path, and are at some distance from it, plant tall growers at the farther side, and graduate the plants in such a manner as to give one the idea of a bank of flowers."

In planning the garden, do not consider one bed as entirely independent of all the others, rather consider your garden as a whole and arrange your beds in such a manner that the color in one will harmonize with that in the next one. Study general effect rather than individual display in the arrangement of colors."

Below are some of Mr. Rexford's suggestions concerning the use of different plants: "Plants adapted for conspicuous positions on the lawn or for back rows: Dahlias, amaranthus, salvias, zinnias, cannas, recinus and gladioluses. For low beds near the path or house, pansies, portulaca, mignonette, myosotis, eschscholtzia, daisies, candytufts, ageratums and alyssums. For beds where a brilliant show of color is desired: For yellow, calliopsis and eschscholtzia, the former a deep, rich shade, the latter lighter and softer in tone; for pink and white, phlox drummondi, in rose and white varieties; for scarlet, salvia splendens; for orange and maroon, nasturtiums in variety; for violet and crimson, petunias. For low beds of shades of scarlet, crimson and rose, also white, verbenas. For edgings among annuals: Candytuft and alyssum, white, ageratum blue, mignonette, brick color." There is much more valuable reading in the article for those who are interested in the summer garden.

FRANCES VIRILLA DOANE.

MR. DANA'S STORY.—The late Richard P. Dana was fond of good stories. There is one he told a short time before his death, in reply to a question as to what was the strongest negative he had ever heard.

"I was in Kobe, Japan, many years ago," he said, "and ran short of ready money. I had a draft for $2000, however, and I went to an English banking house to get it cashed."

"'How much will you charge me to cash this draft?' I asked.

"The cashier figured and named the cost.

"'That is rather high,' I suggested, and tried to persuade him to reduce his price.

"'What are you willing to pay?' he finally asked.

"'Nothing if I can avoid it,' I replied.

"The cashier looked me over from head to foot, then pushed the draft slowly towards me, remarking, 'Sir, we do nothing for nothing, for nobody here.'"

"Doctor told mamma the other evening that if I didn't give up wearing fashionable bonnets I'd have neuralgia."

"And so you're going back to the good old comfortable styles?"

"Nonsense, Lena; if people only make up their mind to it neuralgia isn't such an awful thing."—Judge.

The will of Mark M. Bentley, late of Palmer, was filed for probate yesterday, and gives all his property to his daughters, Nellie Fenton and Mary Fenton Bentley, who are jointly named as executrices. McGilp, who will move his fish market from its present location in Lynde's block. When Lynde's block is in its new location on Main street the room vacated by Mr. McGilp will be occupied by F. J. Wassum, who will move his tailoring business from Caryl's block.

The selectmen held their first meeting for this year Monday afternoon, and organized with H. P. Holden as chairman. Four special police were appointed, J. J. Manning at Three Rivers, Charles Shumway at Bondsville, G. H. Justin and Thomas Roach at Palmer. The license fee was fixed at $1700, the same as last year, and all applications for licenses must be in the hands of the selectmen by next Wednesday night.

Nelson Lanphear of Monson, who has been wanted for several weeks for adultury with Mrs. Dean, a town charge of that place, was brought into the district court Monday and the case was continued until to-morrow. He was found over the line in Connecticut near Stafford. A return was made Monday of a search warrant served on the premises of John McKelligett at Bondsville Saturday night, but which availed nothing. Frank A. Bond, better known as Austin S. Bond, was charged with drunkenness, and was placed on probation until May 5th.

The following, from the Hudson Enterprise, shows with what appreciation Mrs. W. H. Small, the new organist at the Congregational church, is regarded by the people of that place:

Mrs. Alfa Small, for the past 10 years organist at the Unitarian church, has resigned to accept the position of organist at the Congregational church in Palmer, Mass. Mrs. Small will be missed by the Unitarian people, as she has already been from the musical circles of the town, because of her ability and acquirements. No one has been a more laborious student than Mrs. Small, and her classical style, artistic taste, and conscientious rendering of all her selections, distinguishes her as a musician of more than ordinary excellence, and as having a promising future.

There was a bad runaway accident on Main street Sunday afternoon, Elias Anderson of South Monson, his wife and daughter, being the victims. Mr. Anderson was crossing the railroad bridge near the Weeks House when his horse became frightened at a locomotive on the track and ran, throwing the occupants of the carriage out on the corner of Main and Church streets, and freeing himself from the carriage, after which he ran through to Park street and started for home. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson were taken into Dr. Holbrook's office, where it was found that the former had several cuts and bruises, while the latter had a sprained ankle and some other injuries. Miss Anderson was not hurt.

Dr. Holbrook is chairman and Dr. Bliss secretary of the board of health. They have adopted certain rules and regulations, which will be found in another column on this page. They are all reasonable, and only such as will work for the best interests of the community at large. Section 6, if enforced, will produce a change for the better in the appearance of Main street in a short time. Penalties are provided by the statutes for those who violate the rules of any board of health. A new departure this year is in the matter of securing burial permits. Heretofore they could be secured of the town clerk, but must now be had of some member of the board of health. All undertakers must also be licensed, in order to do business.

The school committee has organized with W. A. Breckenridge as chairman and A. B. C. Deming as secretary. Superintendent Small has been engaged for another year. Miss Paine has resigned as teacher at Thorndike, and Miss Moffatt has been transferred to that place from the Blanchardville school, and the scholars will be transport to the grammar school building in this village. There were only about eight scholars in the school, and the teacher's salary, fuel and janitor service was about double what it will cost to carry the pupils to the other school, where they will have much better training than was possible in so small a school. It is probable that this method will be adopted with reference to other school's in the town.

At the probate court held in Springfield Wednesday the following business was transacted: Administration granted in the estates of—Mary J. Merrick, late of Wilbraham, Enos Calkins administrator; Catharine Bolton, late of Palmer, Henry E. Bolton, administrator, Lydia Nelson, late of Wilbraham, A. Jackson Blanchard administrator; Joann M. Fuller, late of Ludlow, Merrick L. Fuller administrator; Mary M. Newton, late of Monson, Sarah M. and Emily M. Newton, administratrices. The will was approved of Charles Upham, late of Palmer, John O. Hamilton executor. George H. Foskit was appointed guardian of Ann Barry of Monson, insane. Accounts were rendered in the estates of Francis S. Beebe, late of Wilbraham; Mary E. Hastings, late of Palmer. License to sell real estate was granted in the estate of Margaret Fitzgerald, late of Monson.

The fire department was called out Monday afternoon for a brush fire on the farm of L. E. Moore at Blanchardville, and it proved to be the hardest struggle the boys have ever had in this line. The wind blew a gale, and the flames swept along with fearful rapidity. About 10 acres was burned over, a part of the land being that of G. W. Powers, on what was the J. H. Keith farm. A peculiar circumstance is that this same land of Powers was burned over two years ago by a fire which was started by W. B. Bennett, against whom a suit for damages was brought by Mr. Keith, who then owned the property. Powers bought the farm recently, and has been summoned by Bennett as a witness for the defense, being expected to testify that the Bennett fire did not injure the timber in his estimation, and that he took no account of the fire when he bought the place. How he will look at the matter now that he owns the land is a matter of speculation.

It may interest some to know what the Wright & Colton Wire Cloth Company of Worcester, which was driven from Palmer by the license policy of the town, is doing at present. The concern is now running from 240 to 250 hands in all departments, and running nearly all departments night and day, turning out from $1700 to $1800 worth of goods daily and having a weekly pay roll of nearly $2000. Plans are being made to add to the plant a 125-horse power high pressure boiler of the most modern design, and six or eight special machines of the company's own design to produce specialties not heretofore manufactured by them, among them a machine to weave fine brass and copper wire cloth as fine as 6000 holes in a square inch. The erection of a 25 by 65 two-story addition to the galvanizing plant will be begun soon, also the placing of two large lead-lined tanks, each holding 40,000 pounds of acid. The wire mill department is now turning out something like 200 tons of wire per month.

The annual meeting of the fire district will be held in the district court room next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The firemen met Monday evening and made up the following ticket to be presented to the voters: Prudential committee, A. T. Wing, W. E. Stone, F. F. Marcy; chief engineer, W. H. Hitchcock; first assistant, C. E. Fuller; second assistant, H. McGilp; treasurer, F. D. Barton. The chief item of interest will be the question of providing a new bell for the fire alarm. As has been stated before, the apparatus has been requested removed from the tower and bell of the Universalist church, and the proposition is to put on the tower of the engine house a bell which shall weigh about 2400 pounds, some 400 pounds more than the bell on which the alarm is now sounded, and which shall have an entirely different tone from that in the church tower. Such a bell would cost about $500, delivered here, and the town has voted to make the necessary alterations on the tower to admit the placing of the bell in position. The fire district also needs some new hose, which can be purchased now at a better figure than at any previous time.

The young man who took a couple of young ladies to an entertainment at Brimfield a few evenings ago, and who, as the night was very fine on the return trip, thought it would be enjoyable for the ladies and himself to take a circuitous route, is still unable to satisfactorily explain to himself or other anxious inquirers how the two and a half hours after midnight were occupied in driving from Thorndike to this place.

The Easter concert which was given in the Union church last Sunday was very creditable to every one concerned in its arrangement. A profusion of potted plants and other flowers were tastefully arranged about the chancel. The instrumental and vocal music was unusually good, and the parts adotted to the children were remarkably well rendered. Besides these agreeable features, the audience was so large that all the seats that could be brought into requisition were insufficient to seat the people.

E. Shumway, and a carriage of Rev. Mr. Hale's. There was no insurance on any of the property; Mr. Parent had carried some on his, but it expired last Friday. The loss is about $500. The fire is supposed to have been caused by tramps, as some were seen in that vicinity.

Sanford Converse of Ware is ill at Mrs G. W. Keith's on Main street.

Mrs. E. B. Blanchard and family are visiting friends in Nashua, N. H.

Miss Julia Sullivan of Amherst has been visiting relatives in town the past week.

A. P. Adams is building quite a large henery in the rear of his residence on Commercial street.

Jesse Trumble, employed at the B. and A. station, spent a few days in Hartford during the past week.

A number of young men from placethis attended the minstrel show and dance at Ware last Friday evening.

Miss Lizzie McAuliffe and Miss Nellie Leary returned on Monday from a short visit with friends in Springfield.

Henry Gay lost the index finger of his left hand while at work on a circular saw at Gardner one day last week.

Several from this village went to Three Rivers Sunday evening to attend the concert given in one of the churches.

Charles McCarty reports that while he was returning home late on Saturday night he was accosted by unknown parties and robbed of a small sum of money.

It is reported that Mr. Labeele, who has lived here for several years and who has been in the employ of the Thorndike Co., is to soon move his family to Canada.

James F. Loftus is preparing to erect an addition to his newly purchased property, formerly owned by A. M. Billings, and when completed will move his business across the street.

Those in this village wishing to draw books from the public library at Palmer can leave orders at the office of Clark & Hastings, where they will find the necessary blanks, etc., and receive further instructions.

Rev. Father Lynch, on account of illness, was unable to celebrate mass on Sunday last. His parishioners hope that his illness will be of short duration, and that he will be able to attend to his duties in a few days.

Stowe & Co's. Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. is to give a performance in Union Hall Monday evening. The company carries its own scenery, brass band and orchestra, and travels in its own special car. Tickets are now on sale at Luman's.

J. P. Crowell, who has been in the blacksmith business here for several years, has given up the business and purchased a farm near the Ware line, and will move his family there the first of the week. Mr. Crowell has made many friends while here who wish him success in his new work.

Our Special Police.

Now that we are to have a special police for this village, the appointment should concern every inhabitant, and the selection of a man for the position should be of great importance. Let the selectmen appoint a man who can be depended upon, and who is sober and can fill the position with credit to himself and the town he represents. The citizens are highly in favor of the move, and will give a good and earnest appointee their hearty support.

Let Us Have Light.

A petition signed by several of the business men, and citizens in general, has been presented to the selectmen, asking them to locate another light opposite the post office on Commercial street. This is the principal street in the village, and as it now stands it is almost in darkness. The special committee last year had one arranged for this place, but as a few individuals did not favor it, it was dropped. It is hoped that the selectmen will grant this request.

Death of An Old Resident.

Charles Gerald, well known in town, died at the home of his brother on Saturday evening after a brief illness. His death was a great surprise to the village people, as his sickness was not considered dangerous until within a few hours of his death. Mr. Gerald was one of the eldest residents the village had coming to this place several years ago with his parents. At the time of his death he was janitor of the Congregational church, and also of the school buildings, and was much respected. The teachers, as a mark of respect, attended his funeral on Monday afternoon and contributed a handsome floral design. His funeral took place from his late residence, Rev. E. B. Blanchard of the Congregational church officiating. The interment was in the cemetery at Four Corners. A wife and three brothers, Isaac, Joseph and Myles, survive him.

Town Meeting.

The pleasant weather and the unusual number idle brought out a good attendance, 576 of the 736 voters being out Monday. There were several important things to act on, and the union temperance meeting held Sunday evening had aroused public sentiment to such an extent that, with the discussions which the articles provoked, the meeting was unusually interesting. A. A. Gage was chosen moderator, and the polls were opened at 9.30 a. m. The officers not to be elected by ballot were chosen by acclamation, as follows: Surveyors of lumber, Wesley A. Squier, Melville Smith; measurers of wood, S. F. Howard, John Leahy, Fisk G. Rogers, D. B. Needham; sealer of weights and measures, Lyman C. Flynt; field drivers, Arthur F. Johnson, John C. Maguire, John T. Casey. It was voted to accept the reports of the town officers as submitted in the town report. The report of the committee on water works was heard at 1 o'clock. In the absence of the chairman, R. M. Reynolds, E. F. Morris was appointed acting chairman and made the report. He said that owing to the absence of the chairman, who had given this subject a good deal of time and thought, the report would not be as detailed as it otherwise would have been. The committee had employed Engineer Frank L. Fuller of Wellesley, Mass., who was skilled in this work, and from his report of different locations they had decided on that in the vicinity of Callahan's farm. The water from this watershed had been analyzed by the State Board of Health, and a favorable report made. Steps are being taken to get a charter, the matter having come up before the Legislature. It is proposed to have a place to hold the reserve water, instead of a reservoir a well 300 feet in diameter and 15 feet deep. The engineer had drawn a plan showing the system of pipes, their size, etc., location of hydrants, gateways, etc., and allowing 10 per cent for incidental expenditures in construction he has estimated that a first-class system of water works could be constructed for $66,000. It was voted that action on this matter be left till the adjourned town meeting. The article to see if the town would raise and appropriate money to suppress the illegal sale of liquor and appoint a committee to prosecute the same called forth considerable discussion, which consisted mainly in finding fault with last year's committee and advocating a new system, which was to appoint one man to act as prosecuting committee, and A. A. Gage was nominated for that office by the advocate of the new system. Mr. Gage refused positively to act in this capacity, and gave his reasons for doing so. The new system was championed by Rev. F. S. Hatch, and was spoken against by several of the prominent men in town. It was finally voted to adopt the usual method, and the incoming board of selectmen were authorized to act as prosecuting committee for the ensuing year. It was voted that the dog fund should be used for the schools. At this juncture, on a motion of G. H. Newton, it was voted that articles 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, which were to appropriate money for the expenses of the town, for the library, the discount on taxes, lighting the streets, cemetery purposes and for Memorial Day, be left to a committee of five who should act in conjunction with the incoming board of selectmen and report at the adjourned town meeting. This committee is composed of George H. Newton, A. D. Norcross, R. P. Cushman, Wm. J. Ricketts and A. M. Beebe. It was voted to allow a discount of five per cent on all taxes paid before August 1, from August 1 to Dec. 1 that the taxes be at par, and from Dec. 1 that interest at the rate of six per cent per annum be charged. The collector is to receive $175 if more than $300 remained uncollected March 1, 1895, and $225 if less. The matter of laying a sewer pipe from the end of an old pipe through land of H. C. Norcross to the Cushman street culvert was postponed till the adjourned meeting. The question of the permanent repair of roads was left to the committee on appropriations. To see if the town would take any action to relieve Mary Smith and others from the overflow of water from Coburn Hill was laid on the table till the adjourned meeting. A code of by-laws prepared by the cemetery commissioners was read by Dr. Fuller and accepted. A description of a proposed new road at the Flynt quarry was read, also a letter from the W. N Flynt Granite Co., stating that the company would bear all expense of the same, and it was voted that the old road be discontinued and the new one accepted. The rebuilding of the sewer running past the residence of E. D. Cushman was left to the committee on appropriations. The appropriation of money to repair a shed at the town farm, and also to lay a new water pipe, was left to the committee on appropriations. The treasurer was authorized to borrow money for town use with the approval of the selectmen. Borrowing money to cover present indebtedness was left with the committee on appropriations. It was voted to publish the warrant hereafter in the Palmer JOURNAL instead of the Monson Mirror. The selectmen were authorized to act in the matter of preventing the dumping of garbage, etc., in the streets. The appropriating of $500 for the fire department and repairing apparatus, etc., was left to the committee on appropriations. The polls were closed at 3 o'clock, and the meeting was adjourned to Monday, April 23, at 1.30 p. m. The vote in detail follows, a star [*] indicating election:

Miss Carrie Burdick was aroused by the smell of the fire and summoned her brother William, who by quick work extinguished it and the fire department was not needed. The damage was estimated at about $75, covered by insurance.

A Crazy Tramp Burns a House.

The house, barns and other buildings of Austin Davis, at Glendale, were burned about 3 o'clock yesterday morning, with all the furniture, hay, grain, wagons, tools, etc. All the live stock was saved with the exception of one heifer and some hens. The loss is about $5000, partially insured. There is little doubt that the fire was set by a crazy tramp who had been hanging about the vicinity for some time, patrolling the roads during the day and remarking that he would stay nine days and then get out, and sleeping in various places at night. He was armed with a knife and revolver, and when hungry applied at any house which was convenient. As he had an ugly manner, he generally obtained what he wished. Wednesday night he was seen going into the shed which was connected with the Davis house. When the fire was discovered the tramp was immediately suspected, but no effort was made to capture him, although he was seen that morning by several persons. Finally the authorities thought it might be best to arrest him, but the constable having been recently appointed had not taken the oath of office, and was obliged to go to Wilbraham to be sworn in. Meanwhile the tramp succeeded in getting away, and has not been heard from since.

WARE.

DEATH OF EDWARD N. ANDERSON.

The Following Occount of the Sickness and Death of E. N. Anderson, Formerly of Ware, is taken from the Worcester Telegram of Monday.

Edward Nathaniel Anderson died at his studio in the Knowles building, 518 Main street, last night at 10.45 o'clock. His death, the primary cause of which was diabetes, was hastened by overwork, and the announcement will be a great surprise to hundreds of lovers of music in Worcester. Mr. Anderson had been unsparing of himself in his efforts to make last week's presentation of "The Messiah" in Central church, a success. Not in robust health, he began the work necessary to carry through successfully such an extensive scheme as the presentation of "The Messiah" complete, and the constant drain upon his energies rapidly reduced his strength. It was remarked by many of his friends that he was far from well during the past week.

Early Sunday morning tenants in the rooms directly under Mr. Anderson's heard groans coming from his rooms. A few minutes later they heard a sound, as of a body falling upon the floor above. Alarmed, they hastily dressed and went upstairs. They knocked at his door, but received no response. They then called the janitor, G. F. Oakley, who knocked, and Mr. Anderson opened the door. He complained of indigestion, and said that since he was first attacked he had been in great agony. Dr. Lamson Allen was called by the janitor, and later Dr. J. K. Warren, who has attended Mr. Anderson, was summoned. Mrs. W. G. Ruggles of 58 West street, an aunt of Mr. Anderson, was notified and was at his bedside through the day. It was evident early in the morning that Mr. Anderson could not live 24 hours. At 2 o'clock he became unconscious and remained so till his death.

Later in the day his relatives in Ware were notified, and his two brothers, Henry and William, arrived on the 8.55 train last night.

Mr. Anderson was 36 years and 7 months old, having been born in Ware August 27, 1857. His father is Dea. Nathaniel Anderson. When 16 years old he began teaching in one of the public schools of Irving. It was known as a "hard school" for which he applied, and the committee was at first unwilling to allow him to run the risk of limb that would naturally come with teaching a country school that had earned the reputation of being unusually difficult to handle. The school was given to him, however, and from the first he was a successful teacher. Afterward, and before he decided to devote his life work to music, he taught several other schools.

He received great impetus in his early musical career from Dr. Blodgett of Northampton. He studied with B. D. Allen and later with Osgood of Boston. He then went abroad and studied Shakespeare. For some time he taught singing in the public schools of Ware.

Ten years ago he came to Worcester to live, and there has not been a time since when his touch has not been felt upon the musical life of his adopted city. He was engaged as tenor of Union church, and sang two years there. He then went to Central church as tenor. Two years later he became director and inaugurated the plan which has been carried out in the church so successfully for the past six years. He has conducted two choruses, and most of the time has lead a separate chorus for the Sunday school. He has also had classes in the primary department. Several times since he became connected with the church he has received flattering offers from larger churches, and his attachment to Central church has done much toward retaining him in Worcester. Each winter he has given 20 lessons to improve the congregational singing of Central church.

Few, even of his intimate friends, knew of the immense amount of work, which, in spite of the disease which afflicted him, he was carrying without complaint. Few, indeed, knew of his work, for being of a modest, retiring disposition, he kept his work to himself. More than a year ago the peculiar character of his disease made it imperative that he should give up composing. It was a severe trial to him when he packed away his manuscripts, for, naturally, his life work would have been in that field of music. Everything that he had written had taken a high rank, for its merit was at once recognized. Since he gave up composing he has applied himself with renewed energy to teaching. For two years he has had charge of the department of church music of the Hartford Theological Seminary. He also taught at "the Elms," a young ladies' school in Springfield. Everywhere he has met with marked success, and has had a remarkable hold upon the affections of his pupils. He had, to a very large degree, the faculty of imparting his knowledge to others. Even his teaching has, however, been affected by his ill health, and he has been obliged to give up some of his work in this direction. His life was bound up in his work. Several years ago he withdrew from society, and his hours of recreation have been very few.

Shortly after coming to Worcester he organized the Gounod club, a society made up of the singers of the quartets of the city. The concerts given by the club were markedly successful. There was never anything haphazard about Mr. Anderson's efforts as a conductor. Most of the works given under his direction have been the outcome of a plan for the improvements of his pupils. His idea was to give his pupils as great an opportunity as possible, to sing works with orchestration, and he had but just started in carrying out his plan. His idea was to make that a Worcester industry. His work as a conductor was vigorous.

He will be best known by his part songs and arrangements of popular ballads. These have been much sung. Two years ago "The Christ Child," a cantata written by him, was sung in Central church. He had nearly completed a "Christmas Oratorio" when he was obliged to give up his work as composer. At that time he took a trip abroad, and came back much benefited in health.

The news of Mr. Anderson's sudden illness came with startling force to Worcester musical circles yesterday. The regular singing was carried through at Central church in the morning, but it was decided to have only congregational singing in the evening. There was congregational singing only at Salem street church also. John H. Howell, Mrs. Howell and Mrs. Ada L. Harrington, all of whom have studied under Mr. Anderson, asked to be excused from evening services. During the day and evening scores of persons called at his rooms to inquire concerning his condition and to proffer aid. The esteem in which he was held was thoroughly attested by the expressions of sympathy.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the Congregational church in Ware, and has never taken his letter from there. His father, two brothers and one sister survive him, and all live in Ware.

The funeral services at Worcester were held on Tuesday, after which the remains were brought to Ware, and on Wednesday at one o'clock services were held at his old home at Ware Center, Rev. J. P. Harvey, assisted by Rev. E. M. Chapman, associate pastor of Central church, officiating. A delegation from the Central Congregational church at Worcester attended the funeral, consisting of C. H. Grout, organist, R. B. Fowle, Ephraim Whitman, G. W. Mackintire, E. M. Chapman and Mrs. Ruggles. J. H. Howell represented Mr. Anderson's Worcester pupils. The floral tributes from Worcester friends were profuse. There was no singing at either service, a touching tribute to the silent voice. His brothers acted as two of the bearers. The interment was at Ware Center.

John Osgood still has charge of the roads.

About $125 was cleared at the Japanese sale last evening.

Some of the sidewalks badly need repairs, especially in front of the town hall. The new board of selectmen is not likely to let such places go long without attention.

Henry M. Bartlett, who has been at the Mansion House the past two years, has rented the Waverly hotel at Worcester, in partnership with D. A. Hamilton of that city.

Charles E. Blood is mentioned for assessor in place of B. F. Davis, who will not accept the office. Mr. Blood would make a good man for the place, as he is an excellent judge of property.

Arrangements are being made to have some of the little ones of the Loyal Temperance Legion take part in the entertainment to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Beveridge at the town hall the 25th.

The overseers of the poor have organized with A. H. Gilbert as chairman, John O. Deslauriers secretary, and John Brosnahan treasurer. All bills must be brought in the first of every month.

The town hall never looked prettier or was more artistically arranged than at the Japanese sale by the ladies of Trinity Episcopal church last evening. There was a good attendance and an enjoyable time.

The house of Henry Fairbank on Pleasant street was entered on Tuesday night and several articles taken, including a collection of coins. Several valuable articles that might have been taken were not molested.

B. F. Davis, elected assessor at the town meeting last week, has tendered his resignation. A special town meeting must be held to elect his successor, as it cannot be done according to law at the adjourned meeting next Monday.

The meetings on Tuesday evenings for Sunday school teachers and Bible students will be continued this month at the chapel of the East Congregational church, under the leadership of Rev. A. M. Osgood. All, of whatever denomination, interested in Bible study are earnestly invited.

An elegant book of poems has been issued the past week from the office of C. W. Eddy, entitled "Duxbury Beach, and other poems, by E. J. V. Huiginn." It bears the imprint of Damrell & Upham, the old corner bookstore, of Boston, as the publishers. There is a fine embossed cover, and a photo-engraving of Duxbury Beach as a frontispiece. There are 21 other poems, and all teach a tender, loving trust in the Heavenly Father that will make men and women the better for the reading. Turner has copies for sale.

CARD.—To the many friends who so kindly assisted in our late bereavement, especially the teachers, we wish to extend our heartfelt thanks.

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., April, 1894.

Fashions for April is out, 5 cents; 50 cents a year.

Our collection of coats and capes is about as full as it will be any time this season. We have been told over and over again within a week, that there is no such stock of desirable styles in the city. Ladies call, go elsewhere, and come back and buy. We ask for no better success with those who come, but we want everybody to come. We want everybody to know how well we are doing the cloak business this season.

Main floor of Pynchon street building.

Two extraordinary black serges, extraordinary in quality and width, we are selling at 50 and 59 cents; both 40 inches. No lady who can use a black serge will be inclined to pass them; for both are worth 75 cents. Send for samples.

Right aisle.

We have just received another shipment of straw matting at 8, 10 and 12½c that should be seen by buyers of such. Not many mattings will be sold elsewhere while they last.

Carpets are here to be looked at. There is a great deal of looking to be done. Take your convenient time.

But now is the time to throw out this hint. By and by you will want your carpets at just such a time; and we shall be very busy then very likely. As soon as you know exactly what you want then is the time to buy, and give us plenty of time to make and lay. There's a great deal in our having plenty of time. We can do much work in a little time, and we mean to do it well; but we can do it better slowly. Give us the time if you can.

Second floor.

Send for bicycle catalog.

A SPRING STORY.

A Few Things You Ought Surely to do at this Season.

In the spring we feel tired, languid and debilitated. The change from cold to warm weather causes a depression of the vital forces resulting in an inactive state of the stomach, liver, bowels and kidneys. Headache is common, and the blood undergoes changes which greatly debilitate the system.

The complexion is apt to be sallow, and dark circles gather under the eyes. If something is not done to overcome these conditions, they will last indefinitely and may result in severe sickness. Read the experience of the well known Mrs. A. A. Herrick, of 40 Everett Street, East Somerville, Mass.

"Two years ago I contracted a very severe cold that settled all over my body. My head and left side pained me all the time, I had no appetite and could not sleep at all nights. I was so nervous I thought I would be insane, and any work seemed like a mountain ahead of me.

"I would become completely exhausted on the slightest exertion. I was obliged to give up and take to the bed. I lay there several weeks but got no better. I began to fear I should never get well, as nothing seemed to affect me. I was finally advised to use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and did so.

MRS. A. A. HERRICK.

"It seemed to quiet me just as soon as I began using it. Before a week I could rest and sleep through the night, and could feel my strength coming back.

"When I began the second bottle I could see I had improved very much. I continued taking it and in a few months no one would know I had been sick with severe nervous prostration.

"It also cured me of female troubles which I had been a great sufferer from. It is a wonderful medicine and I cannot say enough in praise of it. I advise any person afflicted with any of these complaints to use it, and I am positive they will get well."

If you want to be perfectly strong and healthy the best possible thing to do is to take this great curer and strengthener. You can be cured quicker in the spring than at any other season. You must take a spring medicine, everyone knows that, and Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the best and most certain because it always cures.

It is the discovery of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. He is the most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, and can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

THE TALK OF THE DAY.—Persons who believe in luck and signs will doubt less agree that it is unlucky to be struck by lightning on Monday, or take hold of a circuit saw in motion on Tuesday, or tumble downstairs with a coal scuttle on Wednesday, or be hit by a cable car on Thursday, or fall overboard on Friday, or marry on Saturday a girl who swings ten-pound dumb-bells, or be one of thirteen at dinner on Sunday, when there is food for only ten.

"By a talk I have just had with him." "Does he complain?" "No. That's the pathetic part of it. The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

Away with the wash-board—Use Pearline. As long as you use the old wash-board there'll be hard work and waste. That's what goes with it, and can't be taken from it. That's what it was made for. It's the rub, rub, rub, on it that ruins the clothes. It's the wash-board that wears you out. You don't need it.

Away with wash-day! You don't need that, either. You don't set apart a day for washing the dishes. Wash the clothes in the same way, with no more work, a few at a time.

But you'll have to use Pearline to do it. Pearline only can rid you of wash board and hard work; with it you can do your washing when you like. And you can do it safely, too. Directions on every package.

Beware of imitations. 266 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

TURKISH BURIAL CUSTOMS.

There are burial-grounds attached to many of the mosques, picturesque little places filled with diminutive graves and irregular tombstones, and thickly overgrown with shrubs and rose-bushes. It is not the custom in Turkey to keep graves in repair, and the monumental stones, being tall and slender and generally cylindrical, soon fall out of the perpendicular, leaning in every direction and lending the cemeteries a wild and fantastic appearance. Until Mahmud introduced the fez, the headstones of men's graves were surmounted by carved representations of turbans, but since that time the fez is in universal use, painted scarlet when new, with a blue tassel. Upon the column below the cylinder there is frequently a long inscription, beginning with an invocation to God or a verse from the Koran, and followed by a short account of the dead man's life. The tombstones of women either bear no symbol at all, or, as in the great majority of cases, are surmounted by a sunflower or something in the nature of an arabesque or plant. The inscriptions on them are almost invariably in verse. In very rare instances persons of great importance have very elaborate monuments, which are usually ugly in proportion as they are intended to be beautiful, and, like the others, are allowed to fall to ruin. In most of these small cemeteries there are narrow, well-kept walks at a lower level than the graves themselves, and contrasting oddly with the wild growth of trees and shrubbery on each side. Persons reputed to have led holy lives are often buried, especially in the country, in solitary graves surrounded by elaborate gratings and covered by roofs or domes, and it is not uncommon to see them brightly illuminated at night with votive lamps, like the tombs of saints in Catholic countries. For Mohammedans not only reverence the memory of the dead, but believe in the efficacy of their prayers and intercessions. It is a common thing, too, to see the shrubs about the graves of sainted personages covered with hundreds and even thousands of scraps of rag torn by pilgrims from their garments and stuck on the bushes in the belief that the offering will preserve the individual from sickness.—From "Constantinople," by F. Marion Crawford, in January Scribner's Magazine.

INFORMATION.—The minutes had lengthened into hours, as often happens.

He felt that his fate trembled in the balance, yet he seemed powerless to help himself.

He feinted for an opening.

"When I look at that lovely hand—"

His voice trembled. He was desperate.

"—I wonder. Can you guess—?"

She averted her face in confusion.

"—What I wonder?"

His indecision had fled. He was pleading with all the eloquence of youthful love.

Can you guess what I wonder?" he persisted.

"Must I answer?" she faltered.

She turned to him frankly.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A SPRAINED STOMACH.

THERE ARE MORE SPRAINED STOMACHS THAN SPRAINED ANKLES.

The Treatment For Both, Is Rest.

If overwork sprains your ankle, it will also sprain your stomach. A stomach that won't digest its food, is sprained. It needs rest.

The work of your stomach is to digest your food, principally albumenous food. One way to rest it would be to eat nothing at all. Another would be to eat food that is pre-digested. Paskola is a food of this kind.

Your healthy stomach does not digest starch food, it merely acts as a receiving station to pass it on to the duodenum; but when a sprained dyspeptic stomach receives any half digested starch food a chemical action is set up which causes all the well-known symptons of dyspepsia.

You must eat. A sick stomach may need weeks of rest. The only way to rest it and live, is to take Paskola.

Ordinary food will never make you fat while you have a sick stomach. Paskola will.

Paskola is a natural starch food, made of the finest and purest flours, artificially digested. It contains also vegetable ferments which aid the stomach in its digestion of other food. Starch is man's most important food. You can live without fats altogether, but you can't live without starch at all.

Paskola is a natural, pre-digested, starch food. It is a food that is needed by every dyspeptic stomach.

A STARTLING FACT.

Sixteen Per Cent of Life Insurance Applicants Rejected on Account of Diseased Kidneys.

Dr. Lambert, the general medical director of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, New York, said:

"We reject sixteen per cent of the applications made to us for insurance, and I have saved the entire expense of this medical department by the rejection alone of applicants who had diseased kidneys and who died within two years after I rejected them.

This appalling statement should have the attention of our citizens. There is no reason to-day, why people should allow kidney disease to get such a hold on them.

Nature sends her warming in the slight pain in the back, poor circulation of the blood, sediment in the urine. When any of these symptoms appear, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy should be taken in small doses at once, and thus drive the poison out of the blood and restore the kidneys to healthy action. To our knowledge this is the only medicine that surely cures this almost universal complaint.

We note the recovery of Mr. Oscar Lambert, of Jerico, Mo., whose case has been talked of in the papers the world over.

Quoting from his letter to the Press, Mr. Lambert says:

"I neglected the first symptoms until I found myself in bed with a complicated disease of the kidneys. No mortal ever suffered more and lived. My physicians failed to help me. I then used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It relieved my kidneys almost immediately, and in a few weeks I was clear of all pain, and entirely cured.

Mrs. A. J. F. Manchester, of Providence, R. I., writes:

"I began using Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy for kidney disease, when Doctors failed to relieve me. It drove a bad humor out of my blood, and cured my kidney trouble."

Favorite Remedy has had more free advertising in the columns of the daily papers than anything we know of, from the fact that it does as is promised—Cures disease.

It Makes the Heart Grow Fonder.

It was in the early summer when my love and I first parted.
She the seaside sought and left me in the city broken-hearted.
I to swelter through the summer, she on sea-kissed shore to wander.
But her last words gave me comfort, "Absence makes the heart grow fonder."

How I loved the little letters that from time to time she sent me!
As I read, it seemed that they a momentary breeze lent me!
While she wrote of picnics, bathing, yachting trips, then bade me ponder
Well the truth of that old saying, "Absence makes the heart grow fonder."

Fewer still were now her letters and she wrote, "I'm very busy."
I expostulated—mildly—with my wayward, witching Lizzie.
Once more came the same old answer—any other seemed beyond her—
"Don't you know, you stupid Willie, 'Absence makes the heart grow fonder.'"

One more letter yet she sent me, while she at the seaside tarried,
Laughing at our "mild flirtation," telling me that she was married.
And 'twas thus her note concluded—as I read my face grew yellow—
"'Absence makes the heart grow fonder'—fonder of the other fellow!"

MONICA.

To any one coming direct from all the luxury and beauty of the old court above, naturally this little cottage room looks small and poverty-stricken; yet there is a pathetic tenderness about it, too, born of a woman's hand—a touch of gentle refinement that shows itself in the masses of old world flowers, carelessly and artistically put together, that adorn the one table and the two brackets, filling all the tiny apartment with their subtle perfume.

The windows opening to the ground are thrown wide open. Outside, the garden lies panting in the sunshine. There is the sad lowing as of many cows in the far distance. All the land lies quivering in its heat. A faint, useless little breeze comes lazily into the room, ruffling the ancient curtains that are drawn closely together in a vain effort to exclude the sun.

Poor Mr. Norwood, with a praiseworthy determination to seem quite the contrary, is looking the very picture of misery. He has been dragged from his sanctum and his beloved "Aldines, Bodonis, Elzevirs," to interview, or rather be interviewed by, a fashionable young man fresh from town, who, though his nephew, is to him an utter stranger.

Conversation for the last five minutes has been growing more and more languid. Now it threatens to cease altogether. The host is at his wits' end, the fashionable young man is looking distinctly bored. It is therefore with a glance full of rapture, and a nobly suppressed sigh of extreme relief, that Mr. Norwood hears a step upon the gravel outside, that comes quickly nearer.

It is—it must be—Monica, to the rescue!

Now one of the windows is darkened; a figure, stepping airily from the bright sunshine beyond to the room within, parts the curtains with both hands, and gazes inquiringly around.

As her glance falls upon the strange young man, it alters from expectation to extreme surprise—not confusion or embarassment of any kind, but simple, honest surprise, visitors at the cottage being few and far between, and as a rule exceedingly ill to look at.

The strange young man returns her gaze with generous interest, and a surprise that outdoes her own. For a full half minute she stands with the curtains held back in either hand, and then she advances slowly.

She is dressed in a gown of Oxford shirting—very plain, very inexpensive. It has a little, full, baby body, that somehow suits wonderfully the grave, childish face above it, with its frame of light brown hair so like the color of an unripe chestnut. Her eyes are as blue as the heavens above her; her mouth, a trifle large perhaps, but very serious and very sweet.

"Come here, Monica, and let me make you known to your cousin, George Norwood," says her father very proudly. The pride is all concentrated in his daughter. In his soul he deems a king would be honored by such an introduction.

At this she comes closer, and places a small, slim hand in her cousin's.

"I should have known, of course," she says, as if following out a certain train of thought. "I heard you had come to the Court."

"You must be good friends with him, Monica," says Mr. Norwood, nervously. "He is your only cousin, you know—except Julia."

"Yes;"—she is smiling now—"we shall be friends, of course!" Then more directly to the man who is still holding her hand, as if he has actually forgotten it is in his possession, "as my father likes you, it follows that I shall like you, too."

"Ah!" says George Norwood, with an answering smile that renders his face quite beautiful, "then I owe your father a debt of gratitude I shall not easily repay."

Mr. Norwood has been getting nearer and nearer to the door by degrees. Monica, without seeming to notice this, says gently:—"Go back to your books, papa, I will take care of—of—my cousin."

At this Mr. Norwood beat a thankful retreat, leaving the two young people alone.

"Why did you hesitate just now?" asks George suddenly. She has seated herself on a very ancient sofa, and is regarding him thoughtfully.

"When?"

"Over my name."

"Because I didn't quite know what to call you. Your being my cousin does not prevent your being a perfect stranger—and a stranger, I suppose, ought to be called Mr. Norwood."

"If you call me that, I shall be unhappy forever," says George Norwood. "Besides, you can't, you know, because I shall certainly never call you anything but Monica."

"Oh! at that rate," says she, smiling again.

Presently as he stands upon the hearth rug he lifts his eyes and fastens them upon a portrait that hangs above the chimney piece.

"What a charming face!" he says. "What a complexion—and eyes!"

"Yes, it is lovely! It is my grandmother. Don't you think the mouth and nose like papa's?"

"The very image!" says George Norwood. He doesn't think it a bit, but seeing she plainly expects him to say it, he does his duty like a man. "It is a perfect face! But the eyes—they are your own, surely."

"Are they? Do you know I never look at that picture without feeling bitter!" She laughs as she says this, in a way that precludes the idea that acrimony of any sort could belong to her. It was the only thing my grandfather left papa. He made a particular point of it in his will, that it should be given to him. When he had carefully cut him off to a shilling, bestowed upon him an oil painting. Wasn't it munificent? The eldest son's portion to be a mere portrait! While the second and third son's children should inherit all!" Then, as remembrance comes to her, she reddens and grows for the first time confused. "I beg your pardon," she says softly; "I had forgotten you were the child of the second son."

"Don't mind about that," says Norwood. "In my eyes too it was a most iniquitous will."

"Papa was very glad to get this portrait of his mother," says Monica hastily "He adored her. She did all she knew to make grandfather destroy his first will, and leave everything, as was only right, to my father. She gained her point, too, but when she died he forgot his promise and everything, and betrayed the dead, as you can see." She makes a mournful gesture toward the room that so painfully betrays their poverty.

"My father as the second son was badly treated, too," says Norwood, anxious, he hardly knows why, to create a feeling of sympathy between them.

"Not so badly. By leaving the property to you and Julia, the daughter of his third son, on condition you marry each other, he provided for both the children of the younger sons. For me he did nothing. He never forgave papa's marriage. You will marry Julia, of course?"

She is regarding him seriously, and he laughs a little and colors beneath his gaze. "I dare say," he says lightly. "It would seem a pity to throw away ten thousand a year, and if I refuse she gets all, and I am in the cold. As I am heart whole, I may as well think about it; that is, if she will have the goodness to accept me."

"She will," says Monica, with a certain meaning in her tone. "If she refused, she would be left penniless, too; it would all go to you, and she is fond of—" she pauses. "I dare say you will get on very well together," she continues hastily. As you are heart whole, as you say, it really cannot much matter.

"What can't matter?"

"Your marrying for money."

"And if I was not quite free—if my heart owned another tie—how then?" asks he, with an anxiety to know her opinion that astonishes even himself.

"Then it would be disgraceful of you, and contemptible," returns she seriously, but without haste. "Perhaps she thinks she has spoken too severely, because presently she smiles up at him very softly and kindly. And then, after a little bit, he says good-bye to her, and goes out into the gleaming sunshine, and all the way up the grand old court (that may, or may not, be his as his will dictates), and into it he carries, not the face of the cousin who reigns there and whom it is expedient he should marry, but a soft vision glad with eyes that shine like sapphires, and sunburnt hair, and a smile grave and sweet and full of heavenly tenderness.

It is a month later. Thirty days—as cruelly short as days will ever be where happiness reigns supreme—have taken to themselves wings and flown away.

It is now high noon; already the day begins to wane. The god of light grows weary. "Tired nature halts." The streamlets are running wearily, as if fatigued with the exertions of the day, now almost past. "It is the earth's siesta—even the bee flags in his deep and dull monotony."

All the morning George Norwood has toiled assiduously after his cousin at the court; has followed from greenhouse to conservatories, from conservatories to orchards, the woman he has been taught he must marry, if he wishes to keep up his good fellowship with the world to which he has so long been known. Now, when evening is descending, he has escaped from his duty, and has flung himself with deepest, intensest relief at the feet of the woman he ought not to marry, with whom indeed marriage will mean social extinction.

He met her half an hour ago in this little shadowy valley, where the dying sunbeams are playing at hide and seek among the branches of the trees, and where a tiny rivulet is lisping and stammering as it runs lazily over its pebbles.

Monica, having thrown aside her huge white hat, is sitting on a little mound, with her back against a beech tree. She has taken her knees into her embrace, and just now is looking at her cousin from under heavily lashed lids, that seem barely able to support themselves, so languorous is the hour, and so contented her spirit.

Her companion can scarcely be said to be looking as free from care as she is; there is a slight suspicion of weariness in his eyes, his manner is somewhat tinged with a depression very foreign to it, which as a rule is of the debonnair order.

"Anything the matter with you?" asks Monica at last.

"Yes, any amount of things."

"Well—go on—say them all over—it will do you good," suggests she sympathetically.

"Not for worlds—at least, not for many reasons. It would bore you; it wouldn't cure my case, and besides," with a half laugh, "my worries are of the kind difficult to put into speech."

"That means they are nothing but fancies."

"Does it?" Then leaning back, and placing his hands behind his head, he turns his eyes slowly upon hers. "I wish I had never come down here," he says deliberately.

"What!" cries she, leaning toward him. "Has Julia proved unkind? Or is it kind—Won't she marry you? Or will she?"

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Norwood gruffly. "I wasn't thinking of Julia."

"No? Then why are you sorry you came to the Court?"

Norwood at this regards her fixedly. "I wonder," he says, in a curious tone, "whether you really don't know, or whether you are an accomplished coquette?"

"Don't know what?" asks Monica, opening her large earnest eyes to their fullest, and looking at him with such sweet and honest surprise as awakes within his breast the deepest self-contempt. How could he have doubted her, for even one short moment.

"To be a coquette," she says in a little dignified tone, "requires, I believe, practice. There is nobody down here except the rector and Sir John Frere."

"Sir John Frere?" apprehensively.

"Yes. He is toothless and seventy-five. The rector is hairless and sixty-one!" With this she very properly turns her back upon him."

"Thank goodness!" says Mr. Norwood devoutly. He feels affectionately toward both these old men—in spite of their abbreviations, and in spite of the fact that he has never seen any of them. "I beg your pardon very humbly," he says, after a pause full of eloquence.

No reply.

"Monica—speak to me."

"I will not," says Monica, giving herself the lie direct.

"Oh! but you are speaking," declares he. "I'm awfully sorry I said that, because it was as absurd as it was unpardonable.

"As you acknowledge it to be unpardonable, you can't very well look for my forgiveness."

"Nevertheless I do," exclaims he boldly.

"Well, then, say at once I am not a coquette."

"Certainly you are not. You are an ang—You are all you ought to be. You are—"

"That will do," says Monica, with a mischievous glance. "You will overdo it if you go any further. And now don't let us quarrel any more. Tell me what you were doing all the morning."

"Lounging after Julia."

"Happy man! I do so love that old Court, and I suppose she took you through the gardens. If only my grandfather had behaved properly, and left it to papa! Instead of which here we are, playing second where we should be first."

"Well, it's nearly as bad for me, says the man moodily; "I was brought up in the belief that, as your father was not in it, I was to be the heir. And see now where I am."

"You will be all right when you marry Julia," says Monica, with the friendliest encouragement. But this encouragement falls through.

"Oh! I dare say," says Mr. Norwood ungratefully, and with increasing gloom.

"But you can't be badly off. You must have money now, too," says his cousin with a swift glance at his clothes, which were irreproachable.

"Not enough to keep me decently. My mother left me seven hundred a year!"

"Seven hundred a year!" said Mrs. Norwood severely. "I think no young man could possibly require more than that. You have only yourself to think of—no other expenses—no grown-up daughter to dress and keep."

"Well, I could hardly have that, you know," says George Norwood apologetically "I won't be twenty-six until next month."

"I was thinking of papa—if he had seven hundred a year, how happy we should both be!"

"No—you would instantly want more."

"I am sure not. That would give him all he requires—'a house full of books and a garden of flowers.'" She makes her quotation with a sweet wistful smile that goes to his heart.

"And you—what would it give you?" he asks earnestly.

"Me! Oh, I should be happy enough in his happiness," replies she lightly. "The garden of flowers, you see, would be as much mine as his. Now," she says with a little irresistable sigh, "he hasn't even enough money to buy some of the books in which his soul delights."

"Which are they? I mean their names?" asks he eagerly, too eagerly! She raises her soft eyes to his; there is gratitude in them, but stern resolve, too.

"No, no," she says. "Remember what you said a moment since—your income is not sufficient for yourself. You shall not waste it upon us."

"I don't think it is quite a civil thing to remember every word a fellow says," returns George reproachfully.

"Well, we won't go into that," replies she quickly. Then, as if some hidden force compels her to return to the subject, she says: "Tell me how you get on with Julia."

"Mery well," impatiently. "She will look all that is satisfactory at the head of one's table. There is consolation no doubt in that thought, as," bitterly, "I suppose I must marry her."

"Oh, why say must?" gently and with a glance at him from under her long lashes. "It is not a hardship, surely?"

"Perhaps I wouldn't have thought it so a month ago."

"She is young, handsome; that is all one requires, is it not?"

"Not quite! There is something else, I think—many other things; but above and beyond all, the essential grace that makes life—that is, married life—sweet; I mean sympathy."

"She hardly knows you yet," said Monica, deep, but suppressed pity in her eyes. "By and by it may be different." Knowledge of Julia makes her confess to her secret soul that small hope for him lies in a nearer acquaintance with the cousin he must needs marry.

"In six months more it must all be settled," say the young man restlessly. "Julia up to that time has everything. It will then depend upon me whether she will still have everything or only half."

"You are sure she will accept you?"

"I am afraid—I mean," coloring hotly at his mistake, "I think she will do me the honor to be my wife."

"You think rightly. She will not resign the property. Only yesterday she told me she could not live without it. In six months, then, she will have everything, and—you into the bargain!"

Almost as these last words escape her she repents them and growing pale to her very lips, turns her head aside and becomes painfully anxious about an insignificant tear that a straggling briar has created in her gown.

"I am not so sure of that," says Norwood unsteadily. "Monica, look at me. Nay, you must," trying to compel her to return his gaze, which has grown impassioned.

He has taken one of her hands in his, and is trying to draw her nearer to him.

"Release my hand," she says in a low tone, yet with so much authority that he at once obeys her. There is a strange flash in her beautiful eyes that warns him to dare nothing further, and yet makes his pulses throb madly. What a strange proud glance it is, and yet what grief, what anguish it contains.

"I am tired," says the girl wearily. "I will go home—yes, you may come with me; but for the future"—she pauses and resolutely, but with evident difficulty, forces herself to look at him—"for the future you must promise me never again to forget—"

"I promise you faithfully," interrupts he quickly, "I shall never forget!"

She sighs.

Presently, turning to her almost as they reach the cottage, he says, "Are you going to the ball at the Grange to-morrow evening?"

"No."

"But you told me you were asked."

"So I was. I am not going, nevertheless?"

"Why?" There is terrible disappointment in his tone.

"If you must know," she says gently, "it is because I have not got a gown good enough."

"That dress you wore at the Court last evening—"

"Is a fossil—almost an heirloom. The whole country knows it by heart by this time! No! pride forbids my exhibiting myself in it again."

"If you ask your father—"

"I should have one at once—at the expense of his being even duller than usual for a month afterward. He would give me every penny he possesses, would probably sell some of his dearest possessions—books—to get me a few yards of muslin, in which to enjoy myself for an hour or two. Do you think I should enjoy those two hours knowing that? What purgatory they would mean."

"They would, indeed!" he says reverently, gazing at her fair, loving face with unaffected admiration. He does her full justice, and understands perfectly the loyal affection that could find no happiness in a pleasure secured at the expense of a beloved object. Then he wonders why Julia, who has more money at her command than she quite knows what to do with, has not thought of the poor little cousin in the cottage; and then I am afraid he thinks bitter thoughts of the woman he ought to marry.

"You must come and see me the day after the ball and tell me all about it," she says lightly. "Second-hand to hear of it will be better than nothing."

"Yes, I will come," he says absently—but it is plain that his thoughts are roaming, and that he is thinking of something far removed from the soft evening scene that surrounds him.

* * * * * *

The morrow passes; the day dies. Night comes on apace and covers everything. At the Grange the fiddles are sounding, bright forms are moving to and fro; the air is heavy with the breath of dying flowers. It is 11 o'clock, and the ball is well begun; the music grows sweeter, fainter; fans are waving gently.

Down in the cottage a girl is standing in a white gown at one of the open windows, and is gazing eagerly and with sad straining eyes at certain lights that two miles away can be seen distinctly through the still haze of the summer night.

Yes, he is there, of course; and happy and regardless of everything but the moment. It is most natural, is it not? What is there else for him to think of? She, herself, how dearly she would like to be there too! She glances at her gown, and tells herself that almost she might have gone—and then she shrinks within herself, and refuses to confess even to her own heart that it would have been agony to her to have appeared badly dressed before—oh!—many people.

She sighs impatiently, and the tears gather in her eyes and blot out the lights shining gayly so far away; they blot out, too, a dark figure that, advancing rapidly through the few shrubs, enters the second open window and, crossing the room, is at her side before she has time to recognize him.

It is George Norwood, of course—a little flushed from his run, and with his hair slightly ruffled, and with the gladdest light possible in his handsome eyes.

Monica, moving backward, involuntarily seizes the curtain with one hand and stares at him almost affrightenedly. Her attitude reminds him of that happy moment when he first saw her. Before he has time to speak she recovers herself and says, with a poor attempt at coldness:—

"What has brought you here?"

"You know," replies he calmly; "an overpowering desire to see you—to hear your voice again. Your face was in every corner, smiling at me—your voice was clearer than the band, and called me incessantly. I have come!"

He sinks into the chair with all the air of a man who intends to make it his resting place for the remainder of the evening.

"Where is Julia?" asks she, reproof in her voice, unmistakable gladness in her great gleaming eyes. She has a heavy spray of scarlet geranium in the bosom of her white gown. It rises and falls nervously as she stands before him, trying vainly to be stern and angry.

"I don't know—I don't care. Dancing, I suppose."

"Go back to her. I won't have you here. Go back to her at once."

"I won't," says Mr. Norwood.

"But I desire you," exclaims she, with a little stamp of her foot.

"Of course, if you turn me out, I shall have to go," says George Norwood, without showing the faintest symptom of an intention to depart; "but I certainly shan't go to Julia—I've had enough of Julia."

Monica's breath comes a little quickly; she lifts her hand to her soft rounded throat.

"You ought to be with the woman you mean to marry," she says slowly.

"I entirely agree with you," says Norwood with the utmost vivacity. "But that wouldn't drive me back to the Grange. I shall never marry Julia.

"You don't know what you are saying," says Monica, shrinking still farther from him.

"I do. Quite well. I ought to have said it before, but to-night I have made up my mind. If you refuse me, I shall never marry any woman—never! My darling, don't shrink from me: say you love me, say it—Monica, say it."

"No—no. You must be mad," says the girl, as white as death; with both hands she keeps him away from her. "It is ten thousand a year. You shall not do this thing. In the morning you will think——"

"As I do now," interrupts he. "And as I thought yesterday morning, and every morning during the past week—that I love you better than my very life—to say nothing of filthy lucre."

The pressure of the hands that repulse him is not so strong now. Emboldened by this sign of coming weakness, he goes on with renewed spirit:—

"We shall be poor, you know; but you said once you thought seven hundred a year quite enough to live on. You can't go back of that now. You said also that it would be a disgraceful and contemptiable act on the part of any man to marry one woman when he loved another. You can't get out of that, either, and I am not going to look either disgraceful or contemptible in the only eyes I worship."

The hands have grown quite reasonable now, and indeed have slipped from his chest to his shoulders.

"Monica, I am yours, whether you like it or not. You must try and make the best of me," he says very humbly. "My beloved, I can only promise to be a good husband to you till death us do part!"

"Do not talk of death," she whispers tremulously.

"No? Shall we not pray that we may die the same day, and be buried in the same grave? But, living or dying, my own darling, every thought of my heart will be yours."

The hands have slipped a little higher up, and now, with a faint but heavy sigh, that is almost a sob, she twines them round his neck and lays her soft cheek against his.

(You must imagine a good many asterisks here, and then we go on.)

"How was Julia looking?" asks she presently. They are now sitting close together—very close indeed—upon the patriarchal sofa that certainly has seen better days. But if it were satin and down, they could not be more contented with it.

"Very handsome," replies he with the most satisfactory indifference. "'Icily regular, splendidly null' sort of business. No soul and too much flesh. My angel, you have saved me. To think that only for you I might have married her; should, to a moral certainty, you know, as I didn't know what love meant then."

At this juncture there is no mistaking he knows what love means now.

"If you should ever be sorry about this," says Monica nervously.

"Nonsense, darling; you know you are miles too good for me. I hope you will never be sorry, that's all; Monica"—wistfully—"are you certain, positive, that you love me?"

"I am as sure of it as that we are sitting here," said Miss Norwood solemnly.

A further demonstration that they now really know what love means!

"Do you know I'm awfully hungry," says George presently, without the smallest shame or recollection that people in novels never eat anything when filled with tender passion.

"Are you? Do you know so am I, but I kidn't quite like to say it," confessed she naively. "The servants are in bed, I am afraid, but there is cold chicken in the pantry, and—"

Rev. H. W. Pope of Somersworth, N. H., formerly pastor of the Congregational church here, preached his farewell sermon in that place last Sunday, having accepted a position as secretary of the International Christian Workers' Association, with headquarters at New Haven, Ct., to which place he will soon move his family.

Now that the officers of the Boston and Albany road, who live out of town, have cleared up their vacant lot on Main street, it behooves the residents of the place to have at least as much pride about the appearance of the streets of the village as those who do not live among us. A very little work on the part of each property owner would make a vast improvement in the matter.

Dr. C. Wardwell Amerige, who has opened an office in the Shanks house on Pleasant street, selected Palmer as a place of residence after visiting many towns, as the most beautiful and healthful village for a country residence within 40 miles of Worcester. Dr. Amerige has for a long time had an extensive practice in Worcester, where he still continues his office, dividing his time with Palmer.

The pastor of the Congregational church will preach next Sunday morning on "A Sixth Sense." At 7 p. m. a musical and responsive eventide service entitled "The House of Our God," will be given, and the pastor will preach his first anniversary sermon. At the Sunday school the stereopticon illustrations of the life of Christ will be given down to and including the lesson for the day. A hearty welcome to each service.

The social at St. Paul's church last evening was largely attended. Mrs. John Helliwell and Mrs. Walter Shaw entertained, and the young men of the parish served as waiters at the supper. The Eaton Club gave an interesting entertainment after supper, and special mention should be made of the piano and violin solos of Mr. Yanser, and of the vocal solos of Miss Sexton, both of Springfield. About $19 was taken. The club will give two more entertainments this season.

The selectmen have appointed James S. Loomis superintendent of the highways of the town, and he has appointed the following to care for the highways, subject to his supervision: Palmer, C. T. Brainerd; Thorndike, H. W. Stimson; Palmer Center, Samuel Shaw; north of Palmer Center, George Smith; Hastings district, Frank Hamilton; Kerigan district, Joseph Kerigan; Three Rivers, J. F. Twiss; Olney district, William H. Olney. The other appointments are yet to be made.

The fire alarm took occasion to have a little fun all on its own account about 2.45 Tuesday morning, and for five minutes struck a bewildering succession of strokes which aroused many of the citizens from their dreams, though few if any turned out to see where the fire was. Chief Engineer Hitchcock went all over the line of wire the next morning, some of it twice, and finally found the difficulty within three feet of the engine house, where an electric wire had crossed the wire of the fire alarm.

A novel bet is said to have been made between a young lady clerk in one of the stores of the place and a prominent man of the town. Perhaps not a bet, for that might be considered unladylike, but an agreement, whereby if the young lady is not married by next Christmas she is to present the man with a dollar's worth of coffee, and if she is he is to furnish her with the coffee. The outlook for the young lady is rather discouraging, judging from past records, as the man, an ex-town official, has the reputation of always winning.

A horse which was left standing unhitched in front of Holbrook's grain store last Saturday morning started on a journey of its own along Main street toward Thorndike at a lively gait, colliding in front of the Palmer Tea Store with a buggy which stood at nearly right angles with the street. The latter was upset in a twinkling, and the horse liberated from the other vehicle, which was turned squarely bottom up and badly damaged. The horse was caught after a short run and no one was injured, except as the bill for repairs affected the pocketbook of the runaway's owner.

The Woman's Relief Corps had a large attendance at its old folks' concert Tuesday evening, and gave a good entertainment. The odd costumes of bygone days attracted much attention. One of the singers in the quartette which rendered "Cousin Jedediah" was Mrs. Emeline Orcutt of Baptist Hill, 83 years old, who began singing the good old songs 78 years ago, and who yet has a wonderfully strong voice for one of her years. After the piece had been sung Judge Robinson, in one of his pleasantest of speeches, presented Mrs. Orcutt, in behalf of her friends, with a bouquet of 83 pinks.

The case of Nelson Lanphear of Monson, for adultery with Mrs. Dean, a town charge of the same place, came up in the district court last Saturday, Lanphear pleaded not guilty, and his counsel placed him on the stand in his own behalf, but he soon spoiled his case by admitting his guilt, and was bound over to the May term of court in the sum of $300, which he furnished. Somewhat of a sensation was created by Mrs. Dean stating that Mrs. Lanphear has visited her while she was in the lockup and advised her to swear that Lanphear was the cause of her trouble, and to stick to it. If she would do this Mrs. Lanphear promised to get her a lawyer to help her, and do anything possible for her. James Wallace, colored, charged with the same crime with the same woman, is awaiting trial at the May term of the superior court, having waived examination in the court here.

At the Thursday evening meeting of the Congregational church last week it was voted to incorporate the society under the laws of the state, and last evening the incorporation was completed by the adoption of by-laws and the election of these officers: Deacons, W. A. Breckenridge, C. W. Bennett, G. H. Hastings and J. B. Shaw; clerk, O. P. Allen; treasurer, J. H. Tuthill; advisory committee, the pastor, deacons, clerk and J. H. Tuthill, Dr. G. H. Wilkins, Mrs. S. C. Hunt, Mrs. C. W. Bennett and Mrs. Joseph Kenerson; auditor, Dr. G. H. Wilkins; executive committee, J. B. Shaw, H. G. Loomis and L. H. Gager; superintendent of Sunday school, L. H. Gager; assistent, J. C. Wing; superintendent of junior department, Mrs. J. B. Shaw; superintendent of home department, Mrs. W. H. Hitchcock; secretary and treasurer, F. B. Pope; librarian, Miss Julia A. Allen; organist, Miss Charlotte Bray.

These cases were entered in the civil court last Saturday: W. E. Stone of Palmer against A. L. Holt of Palmer; W. E. Stone against Elizabeth Squiers of Monson; Ralph Clifford of Monson against E. A. Day of Hampden; Asahel Abbott of Palmer against Elizabeth Guilder of Wales. In the criminal court Saturday Frank Laird was charged with the larceny of a sum of money from a Polander, and the case was continued to this week for trial, Laird finally being discharged. On Monday Lawrence Robinson, a Polander from Thorndike, paid $6 for drunkenness, and for threatening was bound over in $100 bonds to keep the peace for six months. On Tuesday Maxim Poro, whose propensity for imbibing too freely of the ardent has many times before brought him within the walls of the temple of justice, was sent to the house of correction for three months to meditate on his latest lapse from the path of sobriety. John F. Dewire of Thorndike paid $5 for being drunk.

Green goods men in New York are fishing for victims in this vicinity, and numerous circulars from them are arriving through the mails. They offer $4000 of their goods for $400, $6000 for $500, etc., and guarantee that their stuff will defy detection, in proof of which they enclose a clipping from a daily paper giving an account of the trial of a man arrested with some of their money in his posession, and in the report of the trial the secret service detectives admit that the money cannot be told from good. It is needless to say that the clipping is a "fake," and manufactured for the purpose. The receiver of the circular is to send a telegram, which is written out for him and signed with a number, when he will be sent instructions for reaching the parties in New York. If he nibbles at the bait he will very likely be sent a "sample" of the goods, which will be a genuine bill which any bank will accept. When he finally makes his exchange of money at the meeting place in New York for the "goods" he will find on examination that the package he receives will contain nothing but old newspapers cut the size of bank bills—or as the poor French Canadian who discovered his mistake in Springfield the other night on his way home after investing $500, every cent he had—a piece of brick and some wrapping paper. A good deacon in one of the churches in Palmer was the recipient of one of these circulars a few days ago.

The annual meeting of the fire district was held Tuesday, and was quite well attended. These officers were elected: Prudential committee, W. E. Stone, F. F. Marcy, L. E. Moore; chief engineer, W. H. Hitchcock; first assistant, C. E. Fuller; second assistant, Henry McGilp; clerk and treasurer, F. D. Barton. The appropriations were: Water rent, $1000; salary of firemen, $400; janitor, $96; engineer of steamer, $50; stoker, $20; chief engineer, $150; first assistant, $25; second assistant, $20; treasurer, $25; coal, $40; contingencies, $200; bell, $500; total, $2556. Of this amount $350 was appropriated from money now in the treasury, leaving only $2176 to be raised by taxation. Interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum will be added to taxes not paid on September 1st. The committee appointed last year to look into the question of the district owning the plant of the water company recommended that the present rental system be continued another year, and that another committee be appointed to further consider the matter, which was adopted. The committee is composed of E. Brown, F. F. Marcy, J. B. Shaw, Hubbard Lawrence and L. H. Gager. There was considerable discussion regarding the matter of purchasing a bell for the fire alarm, to be placed on the engine house, but after a thorough understanding of the danger to the building and possibly to life by the apparatus remaining in the Universalist church tower, it was voted that a bell be purchased, and Chief Engineer Hitchcock and E. R. Pierce were appointed to act with the prudential committee in its selection.

Mr. Editor:—Your article in last week's issue with reference to Messrs. Wright & Co. was without doubt read by many of their Palmer friends who will be interested to know of their success in business, while at the same time they will regret exceedingly that they could not have remained in Palmer. I notice that your article states that the reason for leaving Palmer was on account of the license question. If this be true, is it not strange they should move to a license city where the saloon ratio is 13 to our 1? Can you explain how such a firm can build up so extensive a business as you mention in a city like Worcester, where rum flows so freely, yet unable to do but a small business in our town, where shipping facilities are fully equal, if the license question has anything to with it? The facts are that this question was not the cause of their leaving Palmer. Instead, the party furnishing the capital being a resident of Worcester, insisted upon the business being moved to that city, and by so doing their own city would receive the benefit instead of some other town. Who can blame them? These facts come from one closely connected with the firm. There has been a great deal said about license through the columns of your paper the past few months, and it is a question with me whether it has been for the best interests of our town. I admit, everybody is entitled to his or her opinion on the subject, but is it wise to spread it broadcast over the country? I can readily see your position in the matter when letters are handed in for publication, but who is going to stand up for the good of our town if our local paper does not? It was my privilege to hear a statement made in one of our business places not long since by one of our townsmen. He says: "I have lived in quite a number of places in my life, and Palmer is the best of all. Point me out, if you can, a town in this state where you can find a better, cleaner, nicer class of business men than we have in Palmer." Echo answers: Where? Mr. Editor, if we cannot say anything good of our town, we had better not say anything.

Respectfully, C. A. Brown.

Mr. John Watson, a former resident of this place, and boss dyer in the Boston Duck Co's. dye works, died in Magog, Quebec, Canada, April 1st. He was a member of Thomas Lodge of Masons at Palmer. Mr. Watson retired Saturday night in usual health, but his wife was awakened at midnight by a strange sound to find that he was unconscious. A physician was called at once and pronounced the trouble apoplexy, from which he never rallied. He leaves a wife and one daughter in Canada, and one son in New Haven. The funeral was April 4th in Magog, and was conducted by the Masons of that place.

One of our prominent young ladies has been receiving much sympathy from her friends this week on account of the circumstance which necessitated her remaining up the whole of one night the first of the week—because a gentleman friend who came from some distance on his bicycle could not return home before morning. It was a very dark night and the ground became frozen, and it is not to be expected that boys could remain out late.

A serious conflagation was narrowly averted Monday evening at Desaulnier's drug store. Mr. Desaulnier went to Thorndike to attend the play of Uncle Tom,s Cabin, leaving the lights in the store burning. For some reason they all burned up fiercely, filling the room with thick smoke, and before being discovered nearly exhausted the supply of oil in the tank overhead. Passersby discovered what was being done, and breaking open the door put out the lights. When Mr. Desaulnier returned he found his stock of goods not in cases or covered ruined by the heat and smoke, but is thankful nothing more serious occurred. The building is occupied upstairs by several families, and had the fire gained headway would probably have caused loss of life.

"Gentleman's Night" was the attraction which drew such a large audience to the last meeting of the Monday Evening Club. Fully one hundred people were present to enjoy the varied programme, which began with a selection by the Three Rivers orchestra. A mock trial, with C. S. Ruggles as judge, Frank Lavene as clerk, and Bert and Lewis Barker as opposing counsel, with a jury from the audience, occupied the time for an hour or more, and provoked quantities of mirth Some of the hits indulged in by counsel and witnesses were well rendered and kept up a lively interest. A selection by the orchestra was followed by a character sketch with address by Ed. Carrol. which showed him to be an artist of no mean ability. A reading by Mr. Gannon and a medley by the orchestra concluded the programme. Refreshments of ice cream, cake and fruits were followed by the toasts: "The Ladies," "Our Sleighride," "The Monday Evening Club," and "Skating," Bert Barker acting as toastmaster.

THORNDIKE.

Marshal Linson and family have moved to West Gardner to live.

His Third Marriage Not One of Unalloyed Happiness.

The family troubles of Henry J. Dill are exciting considerable attention among his neighbors and friends, and are also giving Mr. Dill himself some uneasiness. Mr. Dill has been a resident of Thorndike for 18 years, and is a highly respected citizen. He married his third wife last October, and his present troubles date from that transaction. Mr. Dill in September advertised for a housekeeper. He got 30 replies by mail, which he studied carefully. One of them in particular attracted his attention, and he determined to call upon the writer. She described herself as Mrs. Margaret Aker, and gave her address as 20 Cypress avenue, Springfield. Mr. Dill called at the address given and saw Mrs. Aker. He liked her appearance and she seemed to have been equally well pleased with Mr. Dill. She expressed her willingness to commence her work as housekeeper for Mr. Dill at once, and returned with him to Thorndike that evening. A few days later she went to Springfield and got her clothes, and then came back to Mr. Dill's for good. Soon after her daughter came to visit her, bringing her husband. The couple seemed as well pleased with Mr. Dill as did the housekeeper, and showed no indication of leaving. Mr. Dill had in the meantime become so much attached to his housekeeper that he could not bear the thought of her leaving. He spoke of his feelings to her son-in-law, who reassured Mr. Dill, and told him he thought she would stay all winter, and perhaps always. This gave Mr. Dill an idea, and he soon after proposed marriage to Mrs. Aker. She accepted and the knot was tied in Hartford, Oct. 28. Mr. Dill at that time had $300 in cash. In addition to this he has an interest in an estate, which will not be settled, however, for some time. Soon after his marriage Mr. Dill found that his wife was sadly in need of clothing, and he says he expended quite a generous portion of his $300 for necessary wearing aparrel for her. After a little while the domestic outlook in Mr. Dill's family became slightly darkened. Mrs. Dill commences to show that her disposition was not exactly angelic, and the daughter was taken sick. The daughter's husband did nothing toward the support of the family, and the burden fell upon Mr. Dill. Being 63 years old, and work being scarce, he found it impossible to keep up with his bills without drawing on his reserve fund. Matters finally became so unpleasant between Mr. and Mrs. Dill that they ceased to room together. Mrs. Dill took up her quarters in her daughter's room, where all hands slept together, except Mr. Dill, who occupied an adjoining room. Dill says he had in his possession a revolver which he had owned for eight years. This was taken possession of by his wife, and he became afraid of her. She was a large woman, and seems to have been well able to handle Dill. Finally the last of the $300 was spent. Shortly after Dill had retired to his room one evening, his wife came in. She told him that as his money was gone he had better draw on the administrator of the estate in which he was interested, saying that he might as well have the use of the money as to have others enjoy it. Dill says he told her that he thought those who at present have possession of it were as much entitled to it as her daughter and son-in-law, after which he went into the kitchen. Mrs. Dill followed him out and flew into a violent passion. She gave Dill a lecture, which according to his story, was very much to the point. Becoming tired of her talk, Dill got up and started to leave the room. When near the door leading to the open air he was intercepted by Mrs. Dill, who struck him a heavy blow on the side with her fist. Dill then returned to his seat, when his wife followed and struck him two heavy blows with the chair. She told Dill that he had kicked her when she first struck him, and threatened to send for an officer. Dill left the house and wandered about the premises some time. He finally attempted to re-enter the house, but was met at the door by a neighbor who told him he would be arrested if he entered the house again that night. He then went into a shed and slept on the ground all night, with no covering but an old blanket. In the morning Dill again tried to get into the house. He found the door locked, and decided to call on an officer to ascertain if he had any rights in the matter. The officer told him he had a perfect right to enter the house, as it was his own, and Dill secured a pinch bar from the shed and started to pry open the door. At the first blow of the bar Mrs. Dill opened the door. She did not speak, neither did Dill. He got his own breakfast and went to work. At noon he returned and found the entire family had departed. He soon found that they had taken up quarters with a neighbor, where they remained about 10 days. On March 21 Mrs. Dill came to the house in the morning and told Dill she had come for her clothes. She said she was going to Boston with the young people, and that she proposed to get them a flat, furnish it and see them settled. After that, she said, if Dill would agree to certain propositions which she would make, she would return to live with him. The party left for Boston that day, which is the last seen of them by Mr. Dill. He has been looking up his wife's record in Springfield, before he married her, and finds, it is said, that she was well known to the police of that city, who arrested her on at least two occasions, when she was sent to the house of correction for short terms. Dill says if she should return and insist on living with him he will be compelled to provide for her. He does not think, however, that she will do so, and says he sincerely hopes she will not.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 11, 1894.

The decisive vote on the woman suffrage bill was reached in the Senate Thursday afternoon. Senator Lawrence of Middlesex moved a substitute to refer the matter to the next Legislature and meanwhile to get the opinion of the people by a vote at the next state election. This was voted down by a tie of 19 to 19, and then the bill was defeated by the vote of 13 yeas to 23 nays and one pair, an ordering to a third reading. The vote on refering the question to the people was as follows:

Yeas: Atwood, Bartlett, Brown, Durant, Fitzgerald, Frothingham, Gage, Harvey, Jewett, Kenrick, Lawrence, Lyford, Mark, Ripley, Salisbury Sarger, Shaw, Smith, Swallow.—19.

Nays: Berry, Besson, Blanchard, Brady, Buckley, Bumham, Butler, Coughlin, Cronan, Gray, Green, Kittredge, Leary, Merrill, Miller, Mullane, Neill, Sawyer.—19.

On ordering the bill to a third reading, the vote was:

Yeas: Besson, Blanchard, Bumham, Gray, Green, Kenrick, Kittredge, Merrill, Miller, Mark, Neill, Sawyer.—13.

Nays: Atwood, Bartlett, Berry, Brady, Brown, Buckley, Coughlin, Cronan, Durant, Fitzgerald, Frothingham, Gage, Jewett, Lawrence, Leary, Lyford, Mullane, Ripley, Salisbury, Sarger, Shaw, Smith, Swallow.—23.

Paired: Bill, yes, with Harvey, no.

It is not easy to unite the opposing elements on the bill to require the registration of physicians and surgeons, yet some concessions have been made which will materially improve the passage of the bill. Several peculiar schools of practice, such as the mind cure, faith cure, Christian science, and hypnotism or mesmerism, have been exempted, and that means a great deal. Then the term of practice which was required as a condition on the part of those who are not to be examined has been reduced from ten years to three. This makes another material change and materially helps the progress of the bill.

The committee on election laws has reported a bill to regulate the conduct of caucuses. It is based on the report of the recess committee on caucus reform, and on a bill which was presented to the committee by the election laws league. It is proposed to make it compulsory for Boston, and to make it possible to be used in any other city where 50 or more voters of one political party ask to have it used. It is a most important bill, whether it passes this year or not, for it marks the growth of our political institutions and their recognition by law.

A sign of the coming contest over taxation questions is seen in the divided report of the taxation committee on the petition for the repeal of the law which permits the double taxation of foreign corporation stock. A majority of the committee are against the repeal, but Senator Lyford of Hampden and Representative Wellman of Malden and Fuller of Boston dissent. The largest of the many petitions for the repeal of the law came from the Boston Chamber of Commerce. Now, there is another phase of this matter which is very interesting. While the committee is against the repeal of the law, it has also reported unanimously against the bill to compel foreign corporations which are doing business in this state to make a return of their share-holders. If the double taxation law remains, the argument is, then it ought to be enforced, but as it was argued last year, if corporations are required to make returns of the names so that the law can be enforced, then so many corporations would leave the state that business would suffer a severe injury and the people would lose more than they would gain. This situation illustrates the perplexities of the tax reformers.

In order to secure more effective action, the Republican members of the House have made an organization which will push legislation as fast as possible, and will try to secure uniform action of members of the party when any policy of the party is to be enforced. Still, it does not appear from the talk of members that party pressure is to be applied as vigorously as in some previous years, when "whips" were selected for every division for the sake of bringing members into line. But the policy of putting on the party screws has never worked well in the Legislature. Enough independent men have always protested that their judgments were their own, and they would not obey the party whips, to prevent the party from being unanimous. More than that, the Republicans have always had so large a majority that they have not been obliged to stand closely together in order to carry a point. It is unquestionably better for legislation in the state Legislature to have one party on national lines largely in the majority, because then appeals to partisanship are not necessary and bills stand much better chance of consideration on their merits. The caucus committee of the Republicans consists of Messrs. Bradford of Springfield, Baily of Arlington, Darling of Hyde Park, Galloupe of Beverly, Hayes of Lowell, Bancroft of Clinton and Wellman of Malden.

Defeat has been the fate in the Senate of the bill to shorten the hours of railroad employes, which had passed the House with no debate and by a large majority. The bill provided that the hours for a day's work should be 10 in a consecutive 11. The railroad people did not seem to wake up to the matter till the bill had passed the House. It is difficult to learn at the state house what the real feeling of the railroad employes is. From some quarters come reports that conductors, brakemen and others do not want the bill, for they would be obliged to work some of the time when they "lay off" under the present system. The labor agitators wanted the bill passed.

With three dissenters the committee on mercantile affairs has reported a bill to allow the Bell Telephone Company to raise its capital from 20 to 50 millions. Those three do not object to the increase, but they want the stock offered first to the shareholders at the market price, and the remainder to be sold at public auction.

No debate was made in the House against the bill which repeals the collateral inheritance tax law and substitutes for it a law which taxes both collatral and direct inheritances the former to pay 5 per cent of the whole money and the latter 1 per cent. Included with the latter are charitable, educational and religious societies and institutions which have an office in this state. The act applies to personal property only. It is based on the theory that assessors do not get at this property while the owner lives, so they are justified in catching it when he dies. But as the property is to be taxed in any event when the owner dies, it looks as if the effect of the bill would be to give an excuse to many consciences for making no returns at all while living. Hear the bill might be entitled, "an act to promote perjury and the concealment of personal property from taxation." The bill is defended as a just measure because, by being conspicuously unjust it is thereby in a measure an offset to people's lying. LANDON.

HAMPDEN.

Scalded to Death.

Last Saturday at two o'clock, as Charles Koller, dyer at the Ravine mill, was strengthening his dye he leaned over the vat, and his feet slipping he was precipitated into the boiling dye, his left side being horribly burned. Medical aid was soon procured and anaesthetics prevented his realizing his terrible agony, and death mercifully released him at eleven o'clock. He was a native of Germany and much respected by his acquaintances. His funeral was held at the Congregational church, at which he was a regular attendent, Tuesday, and the remains taken to Pittsfield for burial, where he has two sisters, being the only relatives in this country.

Expected to be a Minister's Wife.

Miss Emma Ribber of Brooklyn, N. Y., a former student in Wesleyan Academy, has been jilted by George Storner, formerly a student in D. L. Moody's Mt. Hermon school, who is now on trial before the board of directors of the New York City Mission. It seems that Storner and Miss Ribber had known each other from childhood, attending the same school and church. About eight years ago they became engaged, and two years later young Storner gave up his occupation as a barber and began to study for the ministry. Miss Ribber was a poor girl, but managed by hard work and economy to enter Wesleyan Academy. The holidays were spent by them in planning their future. Everything went along all right until a short time ago, when Miss Ribber received a letter asking that the engagement be broken. The disappointment was a great one, and about two weeks ago she returned to her home, unable to devote herself any longer to her studies. Storner admits that he has done wrong, but says that he could pursue no other course. He is at present a student in the Union Theological Seminary, and has been superintendent of the Chinese Sunday School connected with the DeWitt Memorial church. The elders of the church are entirely in sympathy with Miss Ribber, and think that Storner should not be allowed to preach.

Susan E. Fisk of Springfield has brought a bill against Rosa V. Cook, administratrix of the estate of the late Dr. E. W. Royce, formerly of Wales, who died December 30, 1893, and the Springfield National Bank. She claims to have been a partner with Dr. Royce in the preparation and sale of the medicine known as "Dr. Royce's Extract of Bark, Roots and Herbs." She says that she was to receive half of the profits as long as Royce lived, and in case of her death her interest was to be transferred to Royce. The plaintiff alleges that Royce kept the books, drew all checks, and never made an accounting to her. She states that at the time of his death there was about $6000 on deposit belonging to the partnership. She has demanded this sum from the bank, as has also the administratrix, and the bank refuses to pay to either until the court shall decide the ownership. The plaintiff also asks that some suitable person be appointed to determine how much of Royce's property belonged to him, and how much to the partnership. As a proof of the partnership she has a copy of the agreement entered into by her and the doctor.

At the adjourned town meeting Monday the following appropriations were made: Highways, bridges and snow paths, $1650; schools, $1450; superintendent of school, $225; school committee, $50; conveyance, text-books and supplies, $75; school house repairs, $150; paupers, $1200; officers' salaries, $450, miscellaneous, $800; state aid, $50; Memorial Day, $50; interest, $100; librarian, $50; new furnace for town farm, $225. The town voted to leave the repair of roads in the hands of the selectmen.

WARREN.

Arrangements are being made for a ball, to be held next Thursday evening.

Howard G. Rand has resigned his position as express clerk with C. H. Walker, and will go into the insurance business with his brother in Pennsylvania.

It is possible that the election of Monday may be protested as illegal, though just what will be done is not yet decided upon. The name of Frank Tomlinson, nominated for constable by the no-license caucus, and whose name appeared on the ticket as prepared for the McTamany voting machine, did not appear on the Australian ballot as finally used, and a protest was read against the election in town meeting. It is understood that Secretary of State Olin gives the opinion that the election cannot be declared illegal because the law makes no provision for such occurrences. On the other hand Mr. Tomlinson's counsel at Worcester does not see how the election can be legal, at least so much of it as refers to the constables. One proposition is to have a new election for constables only, with the consent of the selectmen and the constables which were declared elected.

THE ANNUAL TOWN MEETING.

Full Account of Its Doings—The Money Appropriated and the Officers Elected.

The adjourned annual town meeting was held Monday, and it proved to be quite as exciting as had been predicted. The meeting was opened at 9 29 with Charles H. Walker moderator. After the polls were opened a motion was made and carried that all action upon the warrant except the election of officers should be postponed until 1 o'clock p. m.

Shortly after 1 o'clock the business was commenced by a motion being made to accept the reports of town officers as printed. This led to some discussion, and the selectmen and overseers of the poor were questioned in regard to some of the items in their reports. After a useless waste of time the reports were accepted. The appropriations were then made. After the appropriations article 4 of the warrant was taken up, and it was voted to fund the floating debt of the town for five years. The town treasurer was then authorized to borrow money to meet the claims against the town in anticipation of taxes, and the remuneration of the tax collector and the terms of collecting the taxes were decided upon. It was voted that all poll taxes be paid before July 1st, and all other taxes before Aug. 1st, and that 6 per cent per annum be added to all taxes not paid on or before this date. The collector is to furnish all stationery, stamps, etc., and will receive six-tenths of 1 per cent of the amount collected. The town voted to have a list printed of all persons who have not paid their taxes on the 1st of March, with the amount they owe. The jury list was accepted after several names had been stricken off.

The article in regard to moving the iron bridge near the mill of Sayles & Jenks caused considerable discussion. Some of the voters realized the necessity of doing something in regard to this matter at once, while others wanted to postpone it in one way or another for an indefinite time. It was finally decided to leave the matter to a committee of six, which is to investigate the matter and report at the next town meeting what is for the best interests of the town. An article in regard to an alteration on Burbank avenue was passed over after some talk. An attempt was made to secure an appropriation for the rent of a room for the Warren Cornet Band, but it was unsuccessful, it being argued that the town could not legally appropriate money for such a purpose. The next article was to see if the town would grant the free use of Fireman's Hall in West Warren to the local brass band, with an appropriation for janitor and incidentals. This was also passed over, the same arguments being used in regard to the legality of such a vote. The town voted to grant the free use of the town hall to the G. A. R. for Memorial Day and for a camp fire on May 8, and a small sum of money was granted Clara Barton post for Memorial Day expenses.

Article 15 was to see if the town would grant the Central Massachusetts Electric Co. the right to put up poles and string wires in the town. This matter brought on a discussion which promised to have no end. Representatives of the company were present, who explained that all the company asked for was a chance to put up poles if it wished to do so, and explained that there was no compulsion in regard to the town taking light from this company. There were some hard heads, however, who could not be made to understand this, and wished to make an ironclad agreement with the company on the spot, whereby the company would be bound to furnish lights at a certain price in case the poles were erected, and and that within three months. Some of the level-headed business men of the town realized the impossibility of such a contract being made at the time, and permission was finally granted. All restrictions in the matter were left in the hands of the selectmen.

An article to see if the number of the school committee should be reduced was passed over, as was an article to see if the town would vote to pay the Warren cotton mills, Sayles & Jenks, and the Knowles pump works for the use of their pumps in case of fire. It was voted to choose three cemetery commissioners, and Joseph W. Hastings was chosen for 3 years, Thomas H. Jones for two years, and Marcus Burroughs for one year. It was asked that the town raise $50 for the purpose of watering the streets around the public buildings, but the article was passed over. A by-law was presented relative to clearing the snow and ice from the concrete walks in the village. Quite a discussion took place in regard to this matter, which at one time became so personal that one speaker was called to order by the moderator. The article was passed over. Article 21, to see if the town would instruct the school committee in regard to holding schools in districts where there are few scholars, was passed over. An article to see if the town would vote the rent of a store occupied by N. D. Noyes to be $200 was passed over. A committee of five was appointed to select a building lot in West Warren for the erection of a safer, larger and more suitable firemen's building, and to report at the next special town meeting. An article asking for an appropriation for the purchase of horses to be kept near the engine houses was passed over. An appropriation of $600 was made for the purchase of two supply wagons to be used by the fire department, and the engineers were instructed to procure the same. It was proposed that the town raise money to put in a system of electric fire alarms, but the measure was defeated. The firemen asked for 1000 feet of new hose, and $500 was appropriated for it. The town passed over an article for an appropriation for the suppression of crime and felony in short order. The selectmen were apointed a committee to spend any appropriation that might be made for such a purpose. It was voted that the unexpended appropriations remaining in the town treasury should be applied on the floating debt of the town. Article 30 was to see if the town would appoint a committee to make a report of the doings of the town, and cause a report to be printed. This article created some discussion, and the voters commenced making amendments to the first motion, whereby different town officers would be appointed on the committee. After a great deal of time had been wasted it dawned upon the voters that the town officers were compelled by law to make a report, and that one had always been made, so that the measure if carried would not make the slightest difference in the town report. After this had been explained the measure was voted down. The town voted to accept the bequest of Elizabeth Carpenter of $100, the income of which is to be applied for the care of the cemetery lot of Nelson Carpenter, without discussion. The matter of defending or prosecuting suits for or against the town was left with the selectmen. The voters then passed over an article to see what action should be taken in regard to providing for the expense incurred in consequence of the Crossman crossing at West Warren, and the meeting adjourned.

The appropriations amount to $34,300, as follows: Contingencies, $1500; town officers, $1500; election expenses, $250; highways, $3000; sidewalks, $200; support of poor, $2500; library, $600; care of cemetery and expense of hearse and digging graves, $450; fire department, $1600; street lights, $1500; soldiers' and sailors relief, $200; military aid, $100; suppression of crime, $300; abatement of taxes, $300; insurance on town buildings, $100; night and Sunday police, $1200; interest, $2000; Memorial Day, $100; wagons for fire department, $600; hose, $500; teachers' salaries, $10,000; fuel and care of buildings, $2000; books and supplies, $1200; evening schools, $200; music, $400; transporting pupils, $600; salary of superintendent, $600; repairs and incidentals, $800. The $600 appropriated for the library is to be taken from the dog fund. The balance is to be raised by taxation. The town officers are: Moderator, Charles H. Walker; clerk and treasurer, C. B. Blair; selectmen, L. L. Gage, W. E. Patrick, J. E. Walsh; overseers of the poor, George Bliss, S. N. Cutler, Mrs. Ella E. Morse; assessors, F. E. Gleason, I. E. Moore, A. H. Converse; school committee for three years, C. O. Walker, D. Olin Clark, F. E. Gleason; for one year, Mrs. Mary C. Buck; auditors, W. L. Curtis, C. S. Hitchcock, H. S. Ellis; constables, W. A. Putnam, H. B. Smith, J. W. Quinlan, C. L. Thompson, Thomas Cunningham.

Our Minister's Wife.

Some Things Which She Knows and Tells.

The position occupied by the minister's wife enables her to hear many things of great interest, and people are always curious to talk with her. As she is sure to relate facts just as they are, it makes her conversation all the more important.

Mrs. Rev. W. B. Worthing, of West Berlin, Vt., is a most charming and estimable lady. She has lately been besieged to such an extent regarding a certain incident, that she writes the following letter for the public benefit:

"Last March I had the grippe, which left my stomach in such a condition that it would not digest anything, I could not eat even baby food without the greatest distress. My nerves were in a fearfully weak condition, and I could sleep but little. I was also full of rheumatism from head to foot, and ached awfully night and day.

"I was in a terrible state and feared I should never get well. I tried physicians and medicines, but got no better. Having heard the most astonishing reports of the good done by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, I determined to try that this time instead of physicians.

MRS. REV. W. B. WORTHING.

"I commenced its use and am happy to say that the results most pleasantly surprised me. I received help from the first dose in the digestion of my food. This I know surely, for I left it off for one meal and plainly noticed the difference.

"After taking three bottles my digestion was even better than before I had the grippe, and my nerves were entirely restored to their normal condition. My rheumatism left me and I had no more pains at all.

"I was entirely cured of all my troubles, and all through the aid of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It is a wonderful medicine, and I advise everyone who is sick or suffering from any cause to take it. It cured me and I am confident it will cure others."

What a remarkable inducement to take this medicine. It is the most certain cure known for weakness, nervousness, indigestion, constipation and all blood and nerve diseases. It is the best thing for kidney and liver complaints. Take it now, in the spring, when you can be cured quickest. Your blood demands a spring medicine, and Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the best because it is purely vegetable and harmless, and always cures.

It is the discovery of our most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. He charges nothing for consultation, either personally or by letter. If you live too far to call, write him.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation others are taking this valuable remedy." Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from all opiates or dangerous drugs.

GRANITE STATE PROVIDENT ASS'N,

"Let us go for it ourselves," said George. "As we are going to set up housekeeping on a limited scale, the sooner we learn how to lay a table and help ourselves the better."

"I don't believe there is any sherry," says Miss Norwood, blushing generously, "but there is"—with considerable hesitation—"beer."

"If there is one thing on earth I love, it is beer," says George Norwood.

"There now," murmurs she reproachfully. "And just this moment you told me you loved only me."

"And so I do, you and you only," declares he fervently.

More asterisks!

"The key of the beer is always kept behind this picture," says Monica pointing to the oil painting of her grandmother he had admired on the first day of his arrival.

"That's a good thing to know," returns he, laughing.

"Well, take it down for me now; it will be a lesson. You will know exactly where to go for it next time."

She laughs too, as she says this, and drawing him up to the chimneypiece points to where the key hangs behind the picture.

Was it fatality, or was it awkwardness? As he puts up his hand he touches the painting, and the string that supports it snapping suddenly, the picture falls heavily to the ground—so heavily that the back parts from it, and leaves it rather dilapidated on the hearthrug.

But something else is on the hearthrug, too! A piece of yellowish parchment, tightly folded, has slipped from between the picture and the frame. George and Monica, both stooping to pick up her grandmother, see this paper at the same instant. She, being the woman, is naturally the most curious, and therefore the swiftest to snatch it.

"Now," she says gayly, putting it behind her back, "what do you say it is—a legacy or a hundred-pound note, or mere padding to keep the portrait steady?"

"Mere padding," guesses he.

"A fairy gift," declares she.

Then they stoop over the lamp and examine it cautiously.

When Norwood has opened it, and read two or three lines of the writing it contains, he utters an ejaculation, and turns to Monica with eyes bright with excitement.

"What was the date of our grandfather's will?" he asks eagerly. "I mean, how long before his death was it written and signed?"

"Three years," says Monica, gazing at him in wonderment.

"And this is dated six months before his death," says he, with something in his tone that resembles awe. "This is another and a later will, Monica, and it bequeaths all to your father!"

* * * * *

It was quite true. I suppose the old man, when feeling sickness come on him—that first attack of paralysis that suggested to him the possibility of death—had repented him of the betrayal of his promise to the wife, dead and gone for seven long years, but green still in his memory. To leave all to the son of her heart—the first, and therefore the dearest babe that had lain upon her bosom—was her prayer. And the father, though estranged from this son for many reasons too numerous to mention here, had succumbed as a husband should to the love of his youth, and had sworn to her that justice should be done.

Yet it was gall to him, the doing of it. Gladly would he have got out of the promise given to the dying woman, but even though the grave had closed upon her, she had a hold over him, born of memories when spring was glad with flowers, and the sun shone, and all was youth and love.

And yet the gall rose to the top and, after a bit, so strong was it that he looked about him for a way to fulfil his promise to the dead and yet work his own desire. He would make a new will—so far she was obeyed, poor soul!—leaving all to the eldest son, whom he so deeply detested, and it should be given into his own hands, but in such wise that he should be none the better by it.

His mother's portrait was made the medium. Behind it, in between the wooden back and the picture, the old man in secret hid the will that vexed him, and in the first document that suited his pride he inserted a codicil leaving portrait, concealed will and all, to his eldest son.

Yet fate is strong, and time brings all things to perfection.

Julia, when matters were made clear to her, took it all very badly. Having a very good income of her own, and an implacable temper, she refused to be comforted, and went abroad to Egypt, or Tangiers, or somewhere, and may now be married to a swarthy prince for all I know.

Pretty Monica has married her lover, and when last I saw her was teaching her little son to "Ride a cock-horse to Banbury Cross" on his grandfather's knee.—The Duchess, in Temple Bar.

A CONVICT'S STORY.

"I am an ex-convict in search of work. Will you please help me to pay my rent."

This was inscribed at the head of a sheet of paper put into my hands by its author. He was a man fifty-two years of age. His constitution was evidently broken. The hang-dog look of a long-time convict had become habitual.

"How long have you been out," I asked. "Two years. I was sent up in 1870, for twenty years, of which I actually served eighteen. I lost four years of my shortning time by getting into trouble with the foreman. He called me a horrible name in anger one day, I threw my tailor's goose at him,—missed him—and went to the dark cell six months, besides losing the four years. See that?"

He pointed to a bunch on his skull, evidently the relic of a dreadful contusion.

"That is where the foreman hit me with his club."

What was your crime, my friend? Twenty years means a serious offence."

"Yes. If you'll let me sit down I'll tell you about it."

I seated the man in my office chair and gave him a glass of water at his request. His frankness and entire absence of adjectives and protestations seemed to me to argue his essential sincerity.

"Probably you never heard of me—or you have forgotten. Twenty years is too long to carry all newspaper crimes around in one's head, I suppose, though they had a great deal to say about me. I would have succeeded all right if it hadn't been for a young fellow named Gordon,—Dick Gordon I think they called him. I've that against him, but I've no time left to settle scores. It's no use, either. But this isn't telling the story, is it?"

He paused a moment to consider—or perhaps still reluctant to go over the matter.

"My name is Carson Bailey. Father and mother never paid much attention to making a good man of me. Still, I had New England air to breath—and, up to the time of my one, only crime, I was not called a bad fellow. You see the first step in my down-fall was in getting acquainted with two medical students at the hospital. Rather, I may say, they got acquainted with me. They had a scheme to work that needed a third actor, and they pitched on me, very rightly guessing that I would be likely to offer few scruples. I was poor and discontented. I had served in the army three years, and the monotony of life after my return made me uneasy for adventures, and ambitious for gain. Without a very fine moral sense, I fear, I had enough education and experience to feel that I was cheated by fortune. There was a girl in the case—always is. I guess she did think something of me, and I,—well it's no use now. Her name was Bertha—I've kept her picture."

Bailey took it from his pocket and showed it to me.

"She's living yet, not any more a girl I suppose—But I don't want to see her now, I'd rather think of her looking like this."

He kissed the picture—there was moisture in his eyes.

"These medical students were careful scoundrels, and the game they were up to was a great one. It was carried out well, too. But there's a weak place in every bad design, I think. One day after our plans were well arranged,—that took a year and a half—I died, that is to say, I was drowned in the pond just above the town. Sixteen insurance companies had policies underwritten on my life, amounting in all to over seventy thousand dollars. My body was recovered after a three-days' search. The face was eaten by some fishes, so it appeared, though I suppose acids, and not fishes, had been at work. But the height, the size, the hair, the color of the eyes, the cast of the face, the clothing, finger-ring, watch, papers, everything were Carson Bailey's. Not a breath of doubt was abroad. I had been seen to go out in the leaky dory, and it was found, full of water, washed against a grass island. No one could be found to say that I knew how to swim. There were a dozen villagers who were entirely certain that I could not swim a stroke. My body was inspected,—no inquest was deemed necessary. The two village physicians certified to my death; the undertaker to my burial. There was never a clearer case, nor one which could be more free from suspicion. Englewood, the leading spirit in the scheme, had a "sister" to whom it was known I had been paying attentions. When it became public that I was to marry her—this was before I was drowned—there was a little scene one night with the other one, well, she knew afterward why I did it. All the policies were issued to this female confederate. This was the only weak place in the plot. So much insurance in favor of a woman who at best was only a betrothed fiance, was liable to be questioned. But, strange to say, the policies were nearly all paid.

"As for me, I took my own death with as much philosophy as could be expected under the circumstances. It made me smile when I heard of the positiveness with which my body was identified. Englewood, who occasionally visited me in my secure concealment, kept me informed of the progress of the plot. He declared that if I had seen his skilfully prepared "stiff" in the coffin, I should have never pretended again to be alive. Englewood was a sly, gentlemanly fellow, with a grim humor about him as ghastly almost as his occupation,—a man absolutely without nerves, or a scruple of any moral color in his entire mental constitution.

"We had prepared and stocked a brush camp in the nearly impenetrable morass of a great swamp, penetrated and saturated by the waters of the lake in which I was drowned. I lived there alone for several months. Englewood, about once a week, ostensibly to go fishing, rowed up the crooked creek that penetrated the morass as far as he could get his shallow punt, and thence, over logs and bogs and dangerous masses of roots and grass, visited my camp. He usually brought me the papers and a supply of cigars or other necessaries. Englewood also brought me at length, a pocket-book full of bank notes, and made an acounting of the insurance money. Three companies held out on some technical ground or other. Englewood declared that they would have to pay, sooner or later. The money was divided equally among four of us. I had over $15,000 for my share. I had only to go away to a distant state or land to enjoy it. It had come out of insurance companies. I did not feel any great amount of regret or remorse. I simply meant not to get caught.

"Not long after the death and burial of Carson Bailey, the P——Life Company, that had underwritten five thousand dollars on my life, sent a young fellow named Dicky Gordon down to the place to see what he might see. The P——Life Company was not satisfied, but, as it seems, they had decided to risk the loss of five thousand dollars on a scheme of their own. They paid the policy in full without any protest, and left the rest to Dicky Gordon. Naturally enough this young spotter turned his attention to Englewood's "sister," who kept very quiet and gave no evidence of anything but the most discreet grief at the death of her betrothed. But Gordon was a patient scamp—blame him! He obtained a situation on the village newspaper, where his natural occupation was news gathering. Little by little he formed his theory. He watched Englewood and traced his course to the bog. Now during my confinement on the morass I used to walk about more or less, in the tall grass and brush for amusement, and to relieve the tedium. I had a skiff hidden in a little inlet under some grass and foliage, and at night when it was late enough to make it safe I used to row a little up and down the creek. One night I came back from one of my walks, and found pinned on my knapsack a note from Englewood. He wrote that arrangements had been made to get me out of the region on the following night. Somebody was trying to work up trouble. He had been followed by a detective. It was not safe to visit the bog, but I was to row over to the west side of the lake at midnight. A man would be there to carry me across to B., where I could catch the Pullman night express to Boston. The note closed with minute directions and cautions, and the declaration that the man who was to meet me knew all, and was in his entire confidence.

"I was angry when I read Englewood's letter. The scheme was known to another—very likely it had been blown abroad. I knew how rapidly such things travel. Still his directions to leave this place at once was the best and first thing to be done. I kept in my camp the next day and laid my plans. At eleven o'clock that night I got out the skiff, and rowed away. The money I had received was in my clothing. I took nothing else along, but was at pains to sink in the creek every article of my camp, and to demolish it as completely as I could. I rowed across the lake to the point named in Englewood's letter. Here I landed and gave the signal agreed upon. Before I knew there was any one near, I found a man on either side of me. I stepped back into my skiff instantly, and before I could be prevented, had shoved it out again into the water.

"'You might as well come back, Bailey, game's up.' I knew the voice. It was Greely, the county sheriff. I immediately turned, and dove into the lake. I swam under water as far as I could, and straight out into the deeper parts. It was very dark, and they had no boat with which to follow me. It was a long swim across, but I accomplished it. I heard their voices on the shore, and they lighted some torches and lanterns after awhile, but I was then too far out to be seen, swimming on my back, with only the level of my face above the calm surface.

But luck was not on my side. Dicky Gordon had posted men at various points all around the lake. There was one near enough to hear the slight splashing I made in coming out on the other side, long before the signal had been sent around, of course. It takes an hour for an average man to swim a mile and a half. I was nearly dead from fatigue, and dropped down on the beach to rest and recover breath. But in three minutes they found me. I heard them moving up the shore, and hid as closely as I could behind a big mill log under the bank. When I found there was no use hiding, I got hold of a piece of fence-rail and told them not to come. I had hardly got the words out, when somebody threw a rope from the bank above, directly over my head in a regular lasso noose, and then it was no use.

Dickey Gorden wrote that decoy letter himself. He had never lost a moment watching Englewood, and his "sister." But they proved too smart for him. Englewood tricked him into a betrayal of himself—just how, I never learned. But Englewood and the other two left in the night, made his way to my camp, watched me go out for my walk, left his decoy letter, and waited for his game.

Of course there was no defense. The P—— Company got their five thousand dollars back, the rest went to the companies that were quickest to file claims. When the judge sentenced me he said, with tears in his eyes, that he had no doubt I was the least guilty, and the most unfortunate of the lot of conspirators.

"And they were never cauggt!"

"Englewood was killed in a railroad accident two years later—the other I never heard from."—Portland Transcript.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

The Woman Across the Way.

My windows open to southward,
And the sun shines in all the day;
Her windows all look northward,
My neighbor's across the way.

My windows are draped with curtains
Of lace, like a filmy spray;
She has only shades of linen,
The lady across the way.

There are diamond rings on my fingers
That over the casement stray;
I have never noticed any
On my neighbor across the way.

But what cares she for sunlight,
This lady over the way,
When a baby face illumines the place
Like the light of a summer's day.

What need has she for curtains
Of rare and costly lace
When the light shines through a golden mesh
Of curls round a baby's face.

Jewels are plenty for money,
But cold to the light that lies
Reflecting the image of souls that met
In the heaven of a baby's eyes.

And I sit a'one in the darkness
When night comes down, and pray
That God will keep her treasure safe
For the woman across the way.

THE RICH FOOL AND THE CLEVER PAUPER.

"You might horsewhip him," suggested Van Shyster, dipping the ash from his cigarette. "You are big enough, Jimmy, and strong enough to knock the stuffing out of him in two minutes."

The two men were standing in front of the pretty fireplace in the reading-room of the University Club, and one of them, judging by his flushed face and excited gestures, was laboring under much mental distress.

"That's just the worst feature of the business. There would be no satisfaction in lickin' such a bag of bones as Blagg. Confound it"—he continued, gazing ruefully at a copy of that morning's "Enquirer," which he held in his right hand—"what have I done to the Johnny that he should pillory me like this? It's a beastly shame. If I'd known I was going to drop into such a slatin' in the papers I'd have stayed in England. I've a deuced good mind to chuck the States and become a British subject. I have, indeed."

His friend trembled at this threat.

"Don't do that, Jimmy. We can't spare you, old man. You'll get over this. Nobody here pays any attention to Blagg. He's given me many a dose. Of course, he ought to be tarred and feathered, but who's going to do it?"

"I don't care so much about myself, Tom, but I draw the line at my mother."

He read as follows: "What can we expect from the son of a woman who deliberately sold herself for a paltry title, and took honest American gold to gild the tarnished escutcheon of a spendthrift English baronet?"

It is necessary to explain that Jimmy Bagster was an American citizen. Old Bagster, early in the sixties, accumulated an enormous fortune, variously estimated at from one to five millions. When he died half of his estate, being community property, went to his wife, and the other half fell to Jimmy, then a freckle-faced boy of five. Mrs. Bagster, who hated San Francisco because some of the best houses there were closed to her, took herself and her diamonds to Mayfair, where, thanks to a house in Park Lane, a first-class chef, and the most ravishing toilets, she captured the hand and heart of a hard-riding baronet. Jimmy was duly sent to Eton and Christchurch. At Eton he achieved distinction on the river but soared no higher in his studies than the lower fifth form. At Christchurch his career was shut rather short by the end of his third term. Jimmy shed no tears, and announced his intention of visiting San Francisco.

"I'm a son of the Golden West," he told his mother, "and I'm goin' to look after my property. The master's eye, you know."

So Jimmy and his valet registered at the best hotel, and occupied a handsome suite of rooms upon the third floor. Nob Hill welcomed him effusively, and clubdom opened wide its portals. Jimmy was young, rich, healthy and good-natured. His English accent was the genuine thing, and all his coats were cut in Conduit street. Of course, he became the fashion. At the present writing he had been exactly six months in California.

Van Shyster pleasantly cursed Blagg and all his tribe as soon as Jimmy had finished quoting from the article in the "Enquirer."

"It's really too bad," he admitted. "Say, let's crack a small bottle, and see if we can't evolve something out of our inner consciousness. Two heads are better than one."

"I'm afraid, Tommy, that our heads don't amount to much. This fellow Blagg has the bulge on us when it comes to heads. Hang it all, who is he, anyway, that he sneers at polo and pigeon shooting? He couldn't sit a horse over a fence to save his life, and looks a regular duffer at all kinds of sport. I should like to know more about him."

"He's no friend of mine," says Van Shyster. "But McLeod over there"—he indicated with his hand a rising young lawyer—"was at college with him, and is posted. We'll find out what there is to know from him. Come over here, Mac, and tell us about Homer Blagg."

"Homer?"—McLeod sighed reflectively—"poor old Homer. He used to be a chum of mine. Clever? Oh, yes, but soured. He's made an awful mess of life, somehow. At Harvard we expected great things of Blagg, but he has had hard luck. He took a high degree in medicine, but I never heard of his practicing. Then he tried law and gave that up. He has made heaps of enemies, and since he took to borrowing from his old friends, I've fought rather shy of him. He struck me for five dollars only last week. Poor Homer! Poor fellow!"

Van Shyster and Jimmy listened with interest.

"He's married, too," pursued McLeod, "has a wife and a half a dozen children. To support them he writes. I see he's been after you, Bagster. Given you a scorching, too. He's always down on millionaires. Well, you can afford to laugh at Homer Blagg. He makes capital—bread and butter, to put it plainly—out of your polo breeches and brown boots. Apparently the perfection of their cut is not appreciated in the woolly West, but give us time and we'll get there. It will pay you as a wise man to join in the general laugh. You can't sue 'The Enquirer' for libel, and you can't make a punching bag out of Homer Blagg, because the sympathy of your fellow-citizens would be on the side of the poor newspaper man. After all, nobody you care about pays any attention to those periodical diatribes. The wise man can read between the envy and jealousy that inspires them. Blagg vents his spleen upon you and Tommy here, because you're at the top of the social ladder and he's at the bottom. It's hard luck upon you, because you're a stranger to our ways, and I know you've taken the keenest interest in this polo and football. Remember, to your comfort, that all decent people are cordially grateful to you. When you get your bearings you'll find out that 'The Enquirer' is written for the masses. They demand pungent, spicy nonsense, and the editor—very properly from the dollar and cents point of view—sees that they get it. It's an easy matter to poke fun at any manly amusement. I think it's Aristotle who says that the ludicrous is always on the surface, and men like Blagg are constitutionally superficial. No, thank you, no champagne for me. I never drink before lunch. Goodby."

"Hang on a minute," cried Jimmy. "Can you give me Blagg's address?"

"He lives in a miserable flat on Mission street. You will find the exact number in the directory."

The young men consumed their pint of extra dry in meditative silence. They both respected McLeod, whose opinions generally carried weight, both in the University Club and elsewhere. Moreover, he had inspired in the simple heart of Jimmy a certain interest in the misfortunes of Blagg and his family; an interest which was doubtless stimulated by the curious discovery that Blagg occupied No. 500½ Mission street, which formed part and parcel of the great Bagster estate.

After luncheon, which consisted of blue points, potted char, eggs a la Benedict, and a remarkable Maraschino jelly, Jimmy announced his intention of taking a walk by himself. Accordingly he selected a large, full-flavored Carolina, which he lit and stuck aggressively in the corner of his mouth, then turned up the bottom of his pants—Jimmy always called them trousers—grasped an Irish blackthorn firmly in the middle and sauntered leisurely down the steps of the club and out into the street. On his road down town he was hailed by several of his friends, but contrary to custom continued his solitary progress until he reached the office of his lawyer.

"I see," he began, blushing through his freckles, "that a fellow called Homer Blagg lives in one of my flats."

"Yes," replied his lawyer, "and he is one of the worst tenants you have."

Does he know that I'm his landlord?"

"No; all your business is conducted in my name."

"Ah," said Jimmy. He settled himself comfortably in his chair, lighted another Carolina, and remarked genially that it was an uncommonly pleasant day.

The lawyer laughed. "You've not come here, Jimmy, to talk to me about the weather. I'm a busy man, so excuse my abruptness. I presume you are annoyed about this article of Blagg's. He goes for you without gloves."

"He does."

"Well, you have an excellent chance to get even. He owes you a considerable sum of money. You can attach his furniture and make it generally hot for him. He ought to be made an example of, and your name needn't appear."

"I hear he's hard up," remarked Mr. Bagster.

"The Bank of San Francisco has some of his paper," said the lawyer, in the petulant tone of a man who settles all his bills promptly upon the first of the month.

"Did they lend him money without security?"

"Humoh, the wisest make mistakes, my boy. They thought the security was good at the time they made the loan. Blagg was then editor and proprietor of a society paper that seemed quite a vogue, and seemed on the high road to prosperity. The fellow has talent, but his pen runs away with him. He involved himself in a libel suit that ruined him, and the paper went to the bow-wows. The cashier of the bank, who was a personal friend of his wife's, took his note for three thousand dollars. Perhaps, under the circumstances, I should have done the same myself."

"I suppose the bank would be glad to sell Blagg's paper."

"At a large discount, yes."

Jimmy sucked siently at his cigar for the space of a minute, then he spoke out boldly:

"I'll tell you what I want you to do. Buy this note from the bank, find out all you can about Blagg's outside indebtedness, do nothing for the present about selling him up and advise me as soon as you have the necessary information. Good mornin'."

The lawyer stared at his trim, retreating figure in astonished silence.

"Great Scott!" he murmured. "Jimmy is on the warpath. Nothing short of Blagg's scalp will satisfy him. Well, well, this world is full of surprised. Who, in the name of the Sphinx, would have accused Jimmy Bagster of being revengeful? I always considered him the most good-natured fool of my acquaintance."

Before the end of the week Jimmy received a note from his lawyer informing him that according to instructions he was prepared to lay before him a succinct statement of Homer Blagg's financial condition. A few more days elapsed, and Blagg received a letter from the attorney asking him to meet a client—no name mentioned—at his office. Thus it came to pass that Jimmy and the Juvenal of the Pacific Slope met face to face. It is pertinent to add that during the preceding week two more articles dealing with the idiosyncracies of Jimmy and his friends had appeared in the columns of "The Enquirer." Both were the fruit of Blagg's caustic pen. Both were offensively personal. Both, if possible, more cutting than the first.

The contrast between stout, smiling, red-faced Jimmy and Blagg impressed the lawyer, who albeit was no sentimentalist, as pathetic in the extreme. Jimmy, lying back in his chair, clothed in spotless homespun, smoothing his blond mustache and indolently surveying Homer Blagg through his eyeglass, looked the incarnation of well-groomed, well-fed prosperity. Poor Blagg, dark and saturnine, out of elbows and out of temper, sat rigidly upright in his chair, scowling fiercely at Jimmy and chewing the cud of bitter introspection. Physically he was the wreck of a once handsome man. The habitual stoop of the hack writer had twisted his slender, graceful figure. Insufficient nourishment had hollowed his cheeks and temples. Care and disappointment had traced their indelible lines upon his sunken features, but his fine eye still glowed with the fire of intense vitality.

The lawyer addressed him in the bland tones of the advocate.

"Mr. Blagg, my client, Mr. James Bagster, holds your note of hand for three thousand dollars, principal and interest unpaid. What are you going to do about it?"

"I thought the Bank of San Francisco held it."

"They have assigned it to Mr. Bagster. My client also holds certain orders on you payable at sight, and representing in the aggregate some $495. He wishes to know if you are in a position to meet this indebtedness. Lastly, he is your landlord, and I find you are in arrears to him for over a year's rent."

"Is Mr. Bagster my landlord?"

"He is."

Blagg glanced at the two men in consternation. Then he said in a low voice, that trembled in spite of his efforts to control it:

"I am completely in your power. For myself I ask nothing, but in the name of my wife and children I plead for forbearance. Give me time! Give me time!"

"I have one more question to ask you, Mr. Blagg. What excuse can you offer for persecuting my client and his friends through the medium of the metropolitan press?"

Blagg, galvanized into passion, sprang to his feet.

"Curse you," he cried, "you have conspired to ruin me. I see the trap into which I have fallen, but I'll die game. You wish to know the motive that inspired those articles?"

He turned to Jimmy, who met his furious glance with a half smile.

"I do, Mr. Blagg. To my knowledge I never injured you. I'm a harmless sort of chap, I believe. What have I done to bring all this unkind ridicule upon my head?"

"Ye gods!" cried Blagg. "He asks what he has done!"

"Yes, what have I done? Tell me?"

"You exist," hissed Homer. "You cumber the ground. You rot at ease like the fat weed. You eat, drink, and are merry, while men with a hundred times your brains and a thousand times your energy and ability starve! Ah, Heaven! the injustice of it!"

"Do you blame me for eatin' and drinkin' and makin' merry?"

"I blame you because you belong to a class that is trying to corrupt our Western simplicity (save the mark!) with the vices of effete monarchies. Because you are trying to introduce foreign customs and manners that may not be tolerated here. Because, in short, you are a snop, sir, from the tip of your ten-dollar shoe to the crown of your ten-dollar hat. It is not your miserable carcass that excites my spleen, but the principal you represent—the principle of monopoly and greed. Tell me of one good deed you have done, and I will beg your pardon."

"I cannot lay claim to even one," said Jimmy slowly, the same half-smile hovering around the corners of his month. "I've had a good time so far, and in my humble way tried to give my pals a good time, and the people generally whom I've rubbed up against. It's true enough that I've not hunted out misery. I'm not built for slummin'. It may surprise you, but I'd no idea that a clever man like yourself could be knocked out in the fight for existence. There must be something rotton somewhere—some joint loose. Well, Mr. Blagg, you've answered my question fairly, and you've given me an idea or two, which, as you said in your Sunday article, I am sadly in need of. As this is a business affair, you will allow me to pay for my lesson in my own way."

As he finished speaking Jimmy drew an elaborate matchbox from his pocket, and extracted therefrom a vesta. Then he coolly proceeded to set alight the promissory note and the other orders. Homer Blagg sprang forward, but Jimmy, waving aloft the flaming papers in his left hand, extended a good right arm, and grasping Blagg firmly by the coat collar, held him powerless until the documents were consumed. Then he pushed Blagg back into his chair, and laughed.

"Quid," he said, "pro quo." That and Floreat Etona is all the Latin I remember."

"Why," stammered Blagg at length, when he had mastered his emotion—"Why, Mr. Bagster, have you heaped these coals of fire upon my head?"

Thereupon Jimmy made the longest speech of his life.

"Ask McLeod, Mr. Blagg. Really you owe this to him, not to me. Candidly I was thinking of punching your head. Not on my own account, but because you wrote a lot of lies about my mother. My own father, an American, mark you, treated her badly. Sir Ralph Nimrod—who is not a spendthrift by the way—worships the ground she walks on. I was speakin' about McLeod. He made me see this thing with his eyes. He assured me that no man of sense paid any attention to 'The Enquirer.' He advised me to join in the laugh against myself. But that wasn't all. He spoke about you and your talents, and the hard luck you had had. That set me to thinkin', I'm a bit of a Juggins, but my heart, I hope, is in the right place. I felt sorry for you and your family; and I thought to myself that a chap soured and flattened out by misfortune was not to be held accountable for every harsh word. It's queer, but if a man gives his kindly feelings a loose reign he'll ride through like a deuced sight easier. I'll say no more, Mr. Blagg. My lawyer here will tell you that if I can help you to a more independent position I'll gladly do so. I'm not afraid of losing my money. Goodby."

Blagg impetuously thrust himself between Jimmy and the door.

"Shake hands," he cried, the tears standing in his eyes, and may God bless you! I'll accept your material help humbly and thankfully, hoping and believing that the day will come when I can repay you. The moral obligation can never be cancelled in this world.

The lawyer, as soon as he was alone, addressed a plaster cast of Plato that adorned one of his bookshelves:

"Truth, O Plato, is stronger than fiction. Jimmy Bagster has masqqeraded as a Fool, and lo, he is a Sage!"—Horace Annesly Vachell, in The Overland Monthly.

THE EFFECT OF WORRY.

Worry is a curse and a source of untold evils. It seams the face with lines and furrows, and has a most depressing effect upon that hyper-sensitive organ, the stomach, which at such times becomes a most unwilling and laggard servant. Indeed, it is safe to say that unless encouraged by a cheerful temper and bright, or at least hopeful, thoughts, the stomach will play truent and do no work which it can shirk. The physiological explanation of this is the close alliance of the great sympathetic nerves, which are worse than the telegraph for carrying bad news; the worry and anxiety which depress the brain produce simultaneously a semi-paralysis of the nerves of the stomach, gastric juices will not flow, and, presto! there is indigestion.

One sign of mental health is serenity of temper and a self-control that enables us to bear with equanimity and unruffled temper the petty trials and jars of life, especially those arising from contact with scolding, irascible, irritating folk. It is well to remember at such times that these unfortunates are their own worst foes, and a cultivation of the art of not hearing will help us very much. It is a very useful art all through life, and well worth some trouble to acquire.—New York World.

SHE GOT THERE.—A Second avenue lady sent her seven-years-old boy four or five blocks up street to tell a friend of hers to come in and see her on business. A few minutes after the boy's return the lady drove up in a cart.

"Mamma," inquired the boy, "is that a jiffy Mrs. Blank is riding in?"

"A jiffy," exclaimed the mother. "I never heard of such a thing. What's a jiffy?"

"I don't know," replied the child earnestly; "she told me when I told her you wanted her that she would be here in a jiffy."

HUMAN NATURE.—"You remember old Joggins who used to be eternally harping on the smartness of Bob Ingersoll and the uselessness of the preachers, don't you? Well, I heard to-day that he had been killed, while traveling through Persia."

"So? How did it happen?"

"He got into a fight with a native who made some disparaging remark about the Christian religion."—Chicago Record.

THOMPSON'S GOAT STORY.

Among our arrivals yesterday was Mr. J. R. Southard, who hails from Newark, N. J. Mr. Southard sells caskets for a Cleveland burial case company—ultimate receptacles they are called in Boston. As would naturally be expected, Mr. Southard is far from being a jolly drummer, but is very solemn, instead.

"You know Thompson of Oscaloosa, don't you? he asked. "Well, I met Thompson down in New Mexico a while ago, and he told me of a cultured goat whose acquaintance he had recently made at some watering place or other. He said: I went out to take a row one day, after a night of jollification, and before I started I put on my latest and shiniest silk tile. I got into the boat and rowed a while, and then stopped besides a rocky shore. I looked up as I stopped rowing, and there stood a goat, gazing very attentively off in the distance. He was a fine animal, with a fairly beard and a patriarchal expression, and I watched him for some time. I fell to ruminating upon the noble characteristics of the tribe to which he belonged, how they could climb and leap where no other animal could obtain a foothold, and I felt quite like a naturalist. A gust of wind suddenly disturbed my peace of mind by catching up my tile and carrying it, turning and tumbling, to a rocky crag above me. The goat saw it as it settled down and started for it. He picked it up while I was looking for a way to get up the rocks, and carried it back to where he was standing. There he sat it down again, after which he commenced looking in the same direction as before. He looked a while, and then put his fore-foot on the top of the hat, and looked again. Then he reached town and took a good mouthful of the silk, stripping it half way round the crown. Once more he looked off into the distance, and again he took a juicy mouthful. I began to wonder what he was looking at, and seeing that the hat was of no further use to me, I rowed on a little past the crag. I was at once confronted with proof that that goat was a cultured animal. Painted on the rock in big letters was

'CHEW THOMPSON'S BEST PLUG.'

"I went back to the hotel convinced that I had seen a goat that could read."—Cleveland Journal.

TWENTY THOUSAND DEATHS A YEAR IN INDIA FROM SNAKE BITES.

In an article by E. C. Cotes, in McClure's Magazine, is is stated that altogether about twenty thousand persons die each year in India from the bites of various snakes and it is no exaggeration to say that some sixty of Queen Victoria's subjects, who were alive and well yesterday, are to-day being burnt or buried out here as a sequel to these accidents. The same will happen to-morrow and the next day. Mortality of this magnitude is a terrible thing, though the fact must be remembered that it is distributed among a population four times as large as that of the United States, and thus passes to a great extent unnoticed.

The casualties are confined almost entirely to the poorer and more ignorant natives, who habitually go about with bare feet. For, although creatures like the hamadryas and the echis are occasionally spoiling for a fight, as a general rule a snake is no more anxious to be trodden upon than a man is to tread upon it. The consequence is that people who wear boots are hardly ever bitten. This is not so much because of the protection of the leather as on account of the noise made by a boot upon the ground, which warns the snake to get out of the way. The ordinary native in bare feet makes hardly any sound whatever as he walks along, and is consequently very liable to surprise a snake in the path. The whiteman, on the other hand, in a good pair of creaky boots, is so safe that it is most exceptional to hear of an accident where he is concerned.

THE GROTESQUE MONSTERS OF NOTRE DAME CATHEDRAL.

Prominent among all the chiméres of Notre Dame is the presiding devil to whom Méryon's etching has given widest frame. A muscular demon with high cheekbones and flat nose, his lean chin resting on his hands, he sits licking his lips over the sins of Paria. His attendant ghouls are less well known. Looking westward over the parvis is a grim fiend throttling a rat, the embodiment of cruelty. Further along a monster grins with the very horror of a laugh. Beyond him sits a creature in despair almost comic, next to a beast howling furiously at the city which it cannot reach. At an angel of the balustrade a phœnix suckles her young with her own blood, watched by a hideous shape with female breasts, clutching the parapet and looking hungrily for the foul brood she has just lost. Behind her a dog tears at a bullock's throat, next to a monstrous bird with hooded head and vacant eye, screaming defiance. Apes and elephants and slimy brutes with scales of ancient evil, crowd round the towers. Among them all there is but one human form, a man who twists his fingers in his beard and strains out over the city as though to search for a deliverer from all these horrors. A goat (surely the goat of Esmeralda) looks down quietly from an angle, and behind every corner you expect the misshapen form of Quasimodo climbing to and fro amid such congenial surroundings or swinging widely in the belfry.—From "Stories in Stone from Notre Dame," by T. A. Cook, in the January number of Scribner's Magazine.

AN OPINION OF VALUE.

It takes some lawyers to know how to achieve success whether or no. To such a one an acquaintance applied the other day

"I say, George," he said; "I've got a case I want to ask you about and see if you will undertake it for me."

"State it," responded the lawyer.

The acquaintance did so.

"Now, what do you think of it?" he asked.

"I wouldn't touch it with a ten-foot pole."

"Is that your professional opinion?"

"That's just it."

"All right, I'll drop it," and he started out."

"By the way," suggested the lawyer, "you owe me $25."

"What for?" asked the astonished visitor, stopping short.

"My professional opinion in the case you have just submitted," was the unblushing answer, and the dazed visitor paid it before he recovered his wits.—Detroit Free Press.

A HEARTLESS PARENT.—It was at the breakfast table, and the young woman's appetite was rather delicate.

"No, thank you," she said as her father offered her some buckwheat cakes, "I quite agree with Herbert. He says he can't abide buckwheat cakes."

"Is Herbert the young man who was here last night?" asked her father, laying his knife and fork down.

"Yes."

"And who met the milkman when he started home?"

"Y-yes."

"Humph!" and he resumed operations with knife and fork. "I suppose he'd have been here yet if he had happened to like buckwheat cakes for breakfast."—Washington Star.

Down in a cavern dim,
Where they biled me fer a dollar
Till it nearly made me sick,

THE PAYMASTER'S STORY.

I was acting as paymaster and chief commissary clerk for a firm of grade contractors upon the Northwestern road, which was then pushing through Northern Nebraska into the adjacent Territory of Wyoming.

We were doing some heavy grading and rock work, and with a large force were pushing the work day and night in order to get out of the way of the track, which had then advanced to a point within a day's ride of us.

We had let pay day slip by without paying the men, and hoped to satisfy them by the issue of time checks until the tracks should overtake us, and our money could come to us with little risk on the construction train. But three or four days after "paying off" time, some of the men began to grow suspicious and to grumble, and threatened to quit work until their checks were cashed. They were afraid we might somehow slip up on them and they wouldn't get their money.

As we were in desperate need of every available hand, it was necessary that the men should be satisfied. So it was determined that I should go to Chadron, our supply base and banking point, and bring up enough money to pay the men their last month's wages, which amounted to about $4000.

I decided to go alone. I set out that night on horseback, and I reached the "end of the track" at Crawford siding the next morning in time to leave my horse at a neighboring ranch corral, and got aboard a supply train which had just unloaded, and was now going back.

At Chadron the supply store of the main contractor, a huge, roughly built shed, stood at a side track about 40 rods from the main street of the town. Here I was accustomed to order supplies and get drafts for money from the bookkeeper from time to time.

That morning, after finishing my business with the supply department, I went to the bookkeeper to procure a draft. A crowd of railroad laborers were waiting before his window to get their time checks cashed, or secure passes to go up or down the road. I noticed that two of these men were better dressed than the others, but thought nothing of the circumstance.

I awaited my turn at the window, and handed the bookkeeper a slip of paper on which was written, "Four thousand three hundred and forty-seven dollars and fifty cents—Pay roll—Rodney and Curtis." He made a draft for the amount named, folded it carelessly, thrust it through the window, and took the receipts which I had written, and then turned to the next man.

As I left the store I passed the two men whom I had noticed at the window, and it struck me on a more attentive view, that they were rather sharpers than workingmen, although I had seen them cash two time checks, and get passes for some point up the road. The construction train did not leave until eight o'clock that afternoon, and I lounged upon the shady stoop of the Chadron House watching the passers-by and chatting with the landlord, who was an old acquaintance of mine when I lived in the East. I had a pleasant dinner with him, and after the meal was finished I walked across the square to Lake & Haley's Bank, at the corner of the two principal street of the town, where I cashed the draft.

The bills I received I stuffed into various side pockets of my clothes, and stowed a pack of silver change into a small leather "grip" which I carried in my hand.

I heard a locomotive whistle, and, turning walked quickly out of the bank. As I reached the sidewalk, I was startled to see the two men who had before attracted my notice step rather hastily away from the sidewalk in front of the bank windows, and walk across the street.

I was satisfied that they had watched me as I cashed my draft. My suspicions were throughly aroused by this circumstance, and when an hour later, I stepped into the caboose of the construction train, and discovered the men lounging upon two cracker barrels smoking their pipes, it did not need their evident avoidance of the direct stare I gave them the moment I entered, to convince me that they were after me.

I now heartily berated myself for not having exercised greater caution while at Chadron. I should have waited until I could see the bookkeeper alone before I obtained my check, and should have had my cash made up by the clerks at the bank, and brought to my room at the hotel, as might easily have been done. But it is easy enough, after you have done a foolish thing, to think how much better you might have managed it.

While I sat upon one of the hand benches in the caboose, with my "grip" lying beneath the seat, I considered how I should dodge the two fellows at Crawford. There was no danger that I should be robbed on the train, as there were at least twenty passengers on board. Presently one of the men sauntered up to my seat, sat down by me, and began to talk.

"See?" said he, "you're with Rodney & Curtis, ain't yeh, one o' their foremen!"

I answered carelessly that I was in their employment.

"Paul'n' I's goin' up the road lookin' for a rock job. We're strikers. Could ye hire us, d'ye think?"

"Certainly," said I, "we need more badly, especially good strikers. Will give you $2 a day, and you can work a part of the night shift, if you like."

Then, as unconcernedly as I could, I went on to tell him about our work, and directed him how to find our headquarters. I told him I should leave Crawford after breakfast the next morning on horseback, and that he and his partner could undoubtedly find a freight wagon there on which to take passage for our camp.

After some further conversation with the man—a young-looking, wiry, dark-faced fellow—he went over to talk to his "pard," and no doubt they congratulated themselves on his success in throwing me off my guard.

On my arrival at Crawford I went to the company's tent, where food and other supplies brought on the construction trains were stored until they could be shipped forward by wagon to points where our forces were at work. There I explained the situation to to the two clerks in charge of the tent, and said I wished to spend thh night with them.

I was armed with a good "six-shooter," and the clerks had each a light Winchester rifle. They said we could guard the money without trouble that night, and it was arranged that I should start for the grading camp at three o'clock the next morning. By leaving at so early an hour I believed that I could baffle pursuit by any robbers who might have conspired to follow me.

My pony—a tough Oregon half-breed, was picketed that evening behind the supply-tent, and the clerks and I took turns in sitting on guard at the opening of the tent I saw nothing of the two "strikers" after we left the train, and no suspicious person approached the tent that night. I shifted the silver from my grip into a pair of saddle-bags, and, armed with my revolver and a borrowed Winchester rifle and a belt of cartridges, mounted my pony at three o'clock the next morning to complete my journey.

Day was just breaking when I came to the fork of the trail at Fort Robinson, two miles from the Crawford siding. Both routes led to the grading camp—one trail lay through White River canon and the other led to my destination by way of Driftwood. One of these routes I must take, and as the men who were "shadowing" me believed that I would proceed by way of Driftwood, I chose the White River canon route, a rough, new trail, that for seventeen miles led through a tumbled rocky gorge or canon, in the bottom of which rippled merrily the little streamlet that is the beginning of the White River.

I urged my pony at a good pace until, after sunrise, I passed a camp of freighters who were preparing their breakfast, and later met several wagons on the move, which relieved the loneliness of my ride and caused me to feel more secure. As the morning was hot and oppressive I now proceeded more slowly. About half an hour after meeting the freighters I halted at one of the numerous creek crossings, and dismounted to drink and eat part of the lunch of crackers and dried beef which I had brought from the commissary tent. As I had no cup I stretched myself out upon the rocks at the side of the current, and buried my nose in the cool water of the spring-fed stream.

As I lay drinking with my head just above the water, a distant sound of horses' hoofs struck on my ear. I ceased to drink, listened intently, and soon heard distinctly the noise of horsemen coming rapidly up the canon.

I sprang to my feet in alarm. My first impulse was to mount my pony and apply the spurs, but as his gait, a raking gallop, was a very slow one, I came to the sudden conclusion to dodge into the brush, and let the horsemen, whoever they were, go by. There were a few box alder trees and several clusters of plum bush close under the rocks on the right. I grasped the bronco's rein, and led him in behind the thicket of the thorn and tied him.

I had but little time to think or act before the horsemen came up at a gallop. I peered through the leaves as they rattled on, and discovered that there were six riders, and that the two stikers were in the lead. They passed my hiding-place without an apparent suspicion that I was concealed there, and, though still much alarmed, was congratulating myself that I had outwitted them when, just as they rode into the water, my pony lifted up his head and uttered a shrill, inquiring whinney.

The party instantly halted. Every rider turned his face eagerly in my direction, and a half-dozen rifles and revolvers were jerked into readiness for action. My pony whinnied again before I could get a grip upon his muzzle, and I felt that unless some unexpectedly fortunate circumstance intervened I should lose the money and probably my life. The horsemen were determined, villainous looking men, and as I glanced about I saw they had a great advantage over me. The scattered patches of pine scrub on the steep, bare sides of the gorge offered me but little shelter for a retreat, and the bushes behind which I stood were but slight protection against bullets. At a second whinny of my horse the men dismounted and stood behind their animals.

"He's in there, sure," I heard one of them say. "Spread out, boys, and let's surround them bushes."

Without waiting to hear any more I thrust the Winchester through the tops of a plum bush and fired at the nearest horse, aiming at its body back of the shoulder. The animal went down with a groan, and the man behind it sprang back with a fierce oath.

My only hope now lay in swift action and certain aim. A quick motive of the lever reloaded and cocked my Winchester, and almost before the horse had fellen to the ground I had aimed and fired at the fellow as he turned to run for cover.

He fell, but got up and ran again. Shifting my aim, I opened a rapid fire upon the other horses and men. The robbers returned a few hasty and ineffectual shots and then scattered in flight. When I had fired the seventeen shots which emptied my repeating rifle, three horses lay on the bottom of the canon at various distances away, and one man with a broken leg was dragging himself toward the shelter of the creek bank. His companions had fled down the canon, two on foot and the others on horseback. Three or four of their shots had struck the bush about me, but none had hit me.

The sudden fierce determination which had seized upon me, and the swift, effective firing which followed, were as much a surprise to myself as they could have been to the "road agents," who, no doubt, believed there was more than one shooter behind the bushes that sheltered me. I dared not stop to look after the wounded man, who undoubtedly would have fired at me if I had approached him. Mounting my pony and keeping as much as possible under cover of bushes, I rode my animal at his best speed up the canon.

About five miles from the scene of the shooting I came upon a graders' camp, and sent some of the men to look after the wounded robber and to secure the saddles of the fallen horses.

I afterward learned that they got the saddles, but could find nothing of the man.

MIGHT BE WORSE.

"Is it sick yez are, Dinnis?" asked Mrs. Finnegan as her husband entered the shanty. "Or is yez drounk?"

"Nayther, bad luck ter yez!"

"Or hev yez lost the job?"

"No."

"Then what are yez doin' comin' home in the middle av the day?"

"It's laid off oi am."

"Fer how long?"

"Fer a wake, to rejuice expinses."

"Sure that won't rejuice our expinses," observed Mrs. Finnegan, sharply.

"Whisht! We must grin and bear it."

"Oh, ye'll be grinnin' and laughin' too, oi make no doubt, down at Casey's saloon all day, but thot won't pay the rint. Sure oi'd like to know how thim cor-r-porashuns think a mon thot's gitting only a dollar and a half a day kin afford to lose a wake's pay."

"It's tough luck intoirely," assented her husband as he sat down on the tubs and lit his pipe; "but it isn't as bad as if oi was gittin' hoigher wages."

"Why not?" asked Mrs. Finnegan.

"Sure don't ye see?" answered Dennis. "If oi was makin' three dollars a day oi'd be losin' double the money."—Harper's Monthly.

OTHELLO REVISED.

"During my senior year at Brown," writes an Editor's Drawer reader, "Booth and Barret played a week's engagement in Providence, and secured among our students such amateur aid as they needed. Among these amateur supernumeraries was one Attleboro, who was given the part of Othello's lieutenant, Cassio. He practiced constantly the scene where he was to interpose between Brabantio and the Moor. He had but three words to say, but it was astonishing what varieties of inflections, gestures and expressions so short a speech admitted. Our hall constantly resounded as he heaviiy paced his room, and frowning angrily at a lamp or picture, swept his arm toward these unoffending objects, shouting, 'Hold your hands!'

"On the evening of the performance the military strides with which he entered the scene and the haughty and martial air with which he grasped the hilt of his sword did honor to his interpretation of the part. We noticed, however, as the noise of the approach of the irate father and his followers was heard, our college Cassio became nervous, and when the two parties of angry men met he was completely held by that form of temporary aberration known as stage fright.

"The momentous instant arrived when blood would be shed unless he intervened. Booth glanced at him impatiently. He stepped forward, waved his arm, and attempted to utter the words of mediation so necessary to preserve the public peace, but to the now quiet house no sound was audible. Othello glared at him; Iago scowled. Again he waved his arm, again moved his lips, but no words came. This pantomime was repeated several times, and the painful silence had become unendurable, when, with a supreme effort, Cassio found his tongue. Again stepping forward, and looking desperately at Booth, he shouted, 'Cheese it!'

"At this unexpected and far from classic sally Booth and the other actors lost their self-control and the remainder of the scene lacked much of its accustomed dignity."

Uncle Silas's Religion.—Uncle Silas had recently joined the church, and Uncle Silas needed it if anybody did. One day he stopped at my gate to ask about the cook's health.

"How about your joining the church, uncle?" I asked, after I told him the cook's health was fair.

"I'se done done it, boss," he replied proudly.

"How about having religion and chickens at the same time?" I said jokingly.

"De good Lawd will pervide, honey," he answered piously.

"Religion, probably, but not chicken," I ventured.

"Yes, honey," and his eyes twinkled, "de good Lawd is gwine ter he'p dem dat he'ps derselves, an' I'se able-bodied yit, t'ank de Lawd."—Detroit Free Press.

She Did Not Drop.—"Delia!"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I am very tired, and I am going to lie down for an hour."

"Yes, ma'am."

"If I should happen to drop off, call me at 5 o'clock."

"Yes, ma'am."

So my lady lies down, folds her hands, closes her eyes and is soon in the land of dreams. She is awakened by the clock striking 6 and calls indignantly:

"Delia!'

"Yes, ma'am."

"Why didn't you call me at 5 o'clock as I ordered?"

"Sure, ma'am, ye tould me to call ye if ye dropped off. I looked in on ye at 5, and ye hadn't dropped off at all! Ye was lyin' on the bed in the same place, sound asleep!"—Good Housekeeping.

Some Pride Left. — Prisoner—"Jedge, is this skinny, red-nosed feller goin' to be my lawyer?"

Judge—"He is. You have no attorney, and it is the duty of the court to appoint a counsel to defend you. Are you ready for trial?"

"Jest a minute, yer honor. He's one of these divorce lawyers, ain't he?"

"He is sometimas called a divorce lawyer, sir."

Straightening himself up — "Jedge, on thinkin' the matter over, ef you hain't no objections I'll take back that plea of not guilty. I stole the hog."—Chicago Tribune.

Taught the Teacher. "Now, children," said the teacher of an Ellsworth primary school, "I want you to remember that wherever you find the letter q the very next letter will always be u!"

A little girl with a very sage look held up her hand and bent over one side to give it greater elevation and the act more emphasis.

"Well, Abigail Jane, what is it?" said the teacher.

"In the alphabet the very next letter after q isn't u!"

"Abigail Jane," said the teacher, with some asperity of tone and manner, "you may take your seat!"—Ellsworth (Me.) American.

A Confederate guard in South Carolina during the war was questioned as to his knowledge of his duties: You know your duties here, do you, sentinel?"

"Yes sir."

"Well, now, suppose they should open on you with shells and musketry, what would you do?"

"Form a line, sir."

"What! One man form a line?"

"Yes, sir: form a bee-line for camp, sir!"

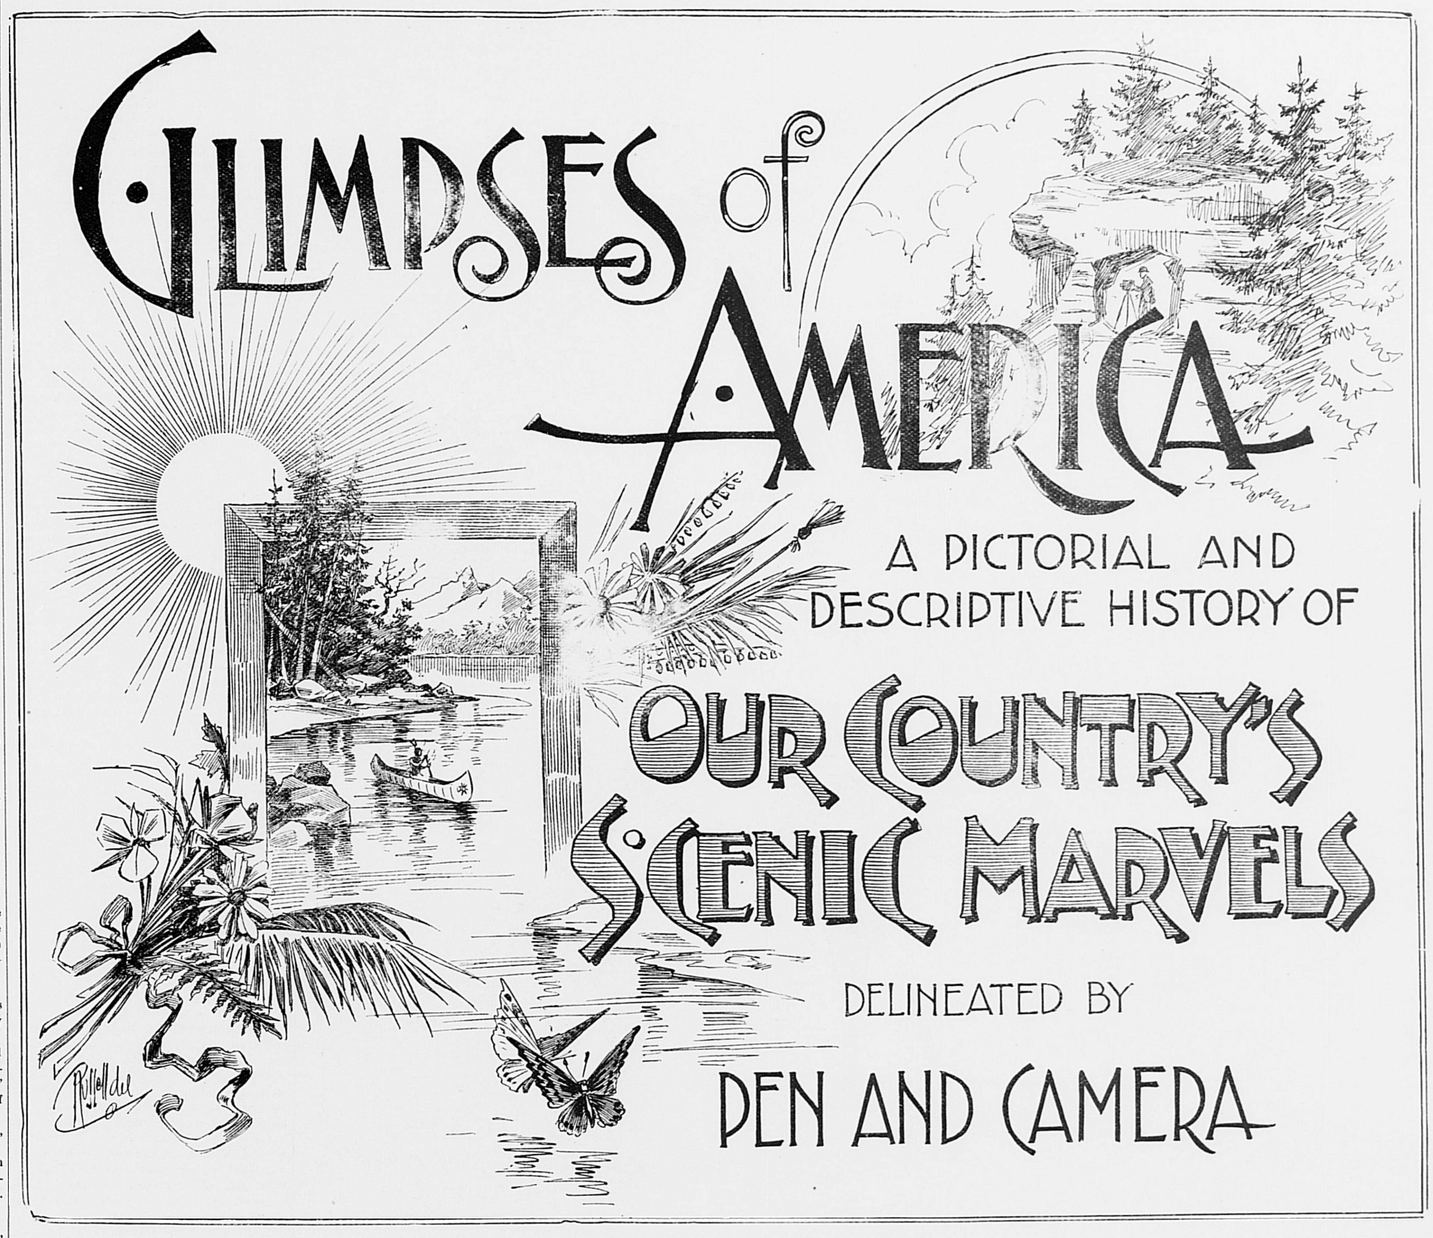
Become Acquainted with your Own Country, the Greatest on the Earth, every portion of which, from Maine to California, and from Alaska to the far South, will be faithfully portrayed in



Our patrons will hail with delight the announcement that this paper has secured for its readers the most splendid pictorial work, illustrative of the wild, wonderful and charming scenery of our country, that was ever issued from the press of any land.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA is a work of superlative merit, superior in its descriptive matter, and resplendent with 550 of the most beautiful half-tone pictures ever produced by the ingenious processes of experimentation and invention. But art and illustration have been surpassed by the discovery of a process whereby scenery is photographed in natural colors, and examples of this sublime discovery are now for the first time used in Glimpses of America. They are called Cameragraphs, because the camera does all the work of both printing and coloring; they are also designated as Heliotypes because no other light than the sun is available for their production, and require an exposure of six hours.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA has been pronounced by a thousand distinguished persons, the most exquisite work that the press of the world has yet brought forth. But its beauty and worth is not restricted to the 550 superb illustrations that present all the marvelous scenery of our country with the vividness of actual observation, for its value is immensely increased by the remarkably graphic descriptions of the author, Mr. J. W. Buel, who with a corps of three expert photographers spent two years traveling in a special photographic car, visiting every section of the nation, collecting facts and making pictures of the scenic wonderlands of America. The cost of their trip was $50,000, as they traveled a distance of 25,000 miles by car, horse-back, stage, boat and on foot, traversing every State and Territory that lies between the two oceans, and between Mexico and Alaska.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA will contain a series of eight super-magnificent Cameragraphs, an invention of the publishers, who have spent a fortune in perfecting the process. Nothing in the way of fine engravings or color printing can be compared with them for their indescribable beauty and matchless splendor, that seem to hold

All the Glories of Nature in their Embrace.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA has no footnote explanations of the illustrations, but contains an historical and descriptive narrative, diversified with stories, legends, adventures and thrilling episodes that make the work more interesting than any novel, and

As Valuable as Any History,

because to Americans it tells a wonderful story, which they ought not only to hear but to know.

This Most Charming and Exquisite Pictographic Work

Is published as a serial, comprising thirty-two parts, one of which will be issued each week and in every fourth number a bewilderingly beautiful full-page Cameragraph will appear. Each part will contain sixteen pages of pictures and reading matter, in about equal proportions, the pages being 11x13¼ inches in size. This paper has secured the exclusive privilege of distributing Glimpses of America in this vicinity, and takes pleasure in announcing that the first number will be ready next week, April 20.

HOW TO OBTAIN THIS PEERLESS WORK!

Inferior serials are now being sold at various prices per number, but we are able to offer Glimpses of America to our readers upon the following conditions, viz: Cut coupon from this paper and bring or send it to our office, together with ten cents, and we will either deliver any one part so ordered in person, or mail the same to any address without further expense.

A STARTLING FACT.

Sixteen Per Cent of Life Insurance Applicants Rejected on Account of Diseased Kidneys.

Dr. Lambert, the general medical director of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, New York, said:

"We reject sixteen per cent of the applications made to us for insurance, and I have saved the entire expense of this medical department by the rejection alone of applicants who had diseased kidneys and who died within two years after I rejected them.

This appalling statement should have the attention of our citizens. There is no reason to-day, why people should allow kidney disease to get such a hold on them.

Nature sends her warning in the slight pain in the back, poor circulation of the blood, sediment in the urine. When any of these symptoms appear, Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy should be taken in small doses at once, and thus drive the poison out of the blood and restore the kidneys to healthy action. To our knowledge this is the only medicine that surely cures this almost universal complaint.

We note the recovery of Mr. Oscar Lambert, of Jerico, Mo., whose case has been talked of in the papers the world over.

Quoting from his letter to the Press, Mr. Lambert says:

"I neglected the first symptoms until I found myself in bed with a complicated disease of the kidneys. No mortal ever suffered more and lived. My physicians failed to help me. I then used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It relieved my kidneys almost immediately, and in a few weeks I was clear of all pain, and entirely cured.

Mrs. A. J. F. Manchester, of Providence, R. I., writes:

"I began using Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy for kidney disease, when Doctors failed to relieve me. It drove a bad humor out of my blood, and cured my kidney trouble."

Favorite Remedy has had more free advertising in the columns of the daily papers than anything we know of, from the fact that it does as is promised—Cures disease.

Death No Disaster.

In this world are many sorrows,
Many dark and dreary days.
Borne because we hope the morrows
Will the veil of mourning raise.

He who pained impatient hastens
The much-longed-for promised rest,
Chafes because the Father chastens
Children whom He loveth best.

Forgetting that we're but sojourners,
Pilgrims in this vale of tears;
We're too willing to be mourners
When death in our midst appears.

Why with folded hands and idle
Sit when dear ones pass away?
Let us bear as to the bridal
Her whose Bridegroom made the clay.

When our friends are taken from us,
Old and young and great and small
Enter the rich Land of Promise
Where is room enough for all.

Just before the sun-lit rain goes,
Passing far beyond our sight,
Winged spirits walk the rainbow's
Great earth-spanning arch of light.

When the light from eyes is going,
Eyes 'twas heaven to look within,
While our tears of grief are flowing,
Angels their good work begin;

And they bear the living spirit
To the mansions of the blest,
There the glory to inherit
That's for its condition best.

The to-days and the to-morrows
Are but flashes from the sun;
Only when this vale of sorrows
Darkens is our day begun.

MOSES TEGGART.

UNCLE NATHAN'S WHITE HAT.

"You don't like it, Sary? Why, it's the best made hat in the kentry; it's all real silk beaver. No shoddy 'bout it—not a bit. Mebby, as you say, 'tis a leetle behind the fashion; but I never sot up fur bein' stylish. 'Twa'n't in me, I s'pose; but your grandma 'll tell you I was allus dressed as well as any young man that went to see her fifty year ago. Ain't that so, ma?" he asked, with a humorous twinkle in his eyes, as he turned to Aunt Becky.

She was sitting at the light-stand mending her husband's socks. Dear, good soul, beloved by all the neighborhood! She looked over her spectacles at him, smiling serenely, as she replied: "Yis; you looked as well as any of 'em, I guess, but the looks wasn't the main thing; it was the behavior, you know." Here she glanced at her granddaughter, who had entered the room as her grandfather—just returned from the village—started to put away his hat.

Nearly every person has at least one pet weakness, and Uncle Nathan Brewer was not exempt from this general rule. His white hat, that had descended to him from his father, was his pride and his care. Worn only on extra occasions, such as to town meetings, to church, to funerals, and, occasionally of a Saturday, into the village, it was always carefully brushed and deposited in its original box, standing on the chests of drawers in the bedroom.

Upon this occasion his granddaughter, Sarah, having heard certain derogatory remarks made by some of the young folks about Uncle Nathan's persistency in wearing this somewhat obsolete head-covering, had expressed the dislike of it to that worthy man. This elicited the foregoing remarks.

When this good, old soul went out into the shed to prepare kindlings for the morning, Aunt Becky said to Sarah, who had given up her lesson book for the evening: "Your grandpa is dretful proud of that hat, it bein' his pa's before him; and I wouldn't say anything ag'inst it if I was you?"

Every one in Rockdale knew Uncle Nathan Brewer, and appreciated him and dear Aunt Becky for their excellence. The tall, white hat of another generation was expected to accompany him upon all occasions when his best clothes were worn.

Naturally, some of the young people laughed at the old man's eccentricity in this respect, and were wont to say on a Sunday, if he came to church without it: "I'll bet it will rain before meeting is out; for Uncle Nate hasn't worn his white hat!"

When Uncle Nathan came in from the woodshed, and sat toasting his feet by the fire, he again referred to that paragon of hats; and, as Sarah had laid by her book, and was ready to listen, he said: "You ought to know the history of that hat of your grandpa's; 'tain't nothin' common. It was made for my father by Uncle Nathan, his youngest brother. I was named for him, and he worked in Danbury, where there was a big factory. They turned out thousands of 'em every year. Not this kind! No! there wasn't many could affort as nice ones. Why, even congrissmen used to order them kind from there; they couldn't git nothin' as good in other places. My father (your gret-grandfer, Sary) was well to do; he had a big farm," here the old man sighed; "and he wanted the best hat that was made. Why, ma!" turning to his wife, "that hat is nigh onto sixty year old, and not a brack in it yit." Then the old man rubbed his hands, as he leaned toward the fire, and smiled complacently.

Sarah was a good girl, sunny-faced, sweet-tempered, and affectionate. It was Aunt Becky who was speaking about her to one of her old neighbors, "Ma'm Pettis," a few days afterward:—

"Me and grandpa couldn't nowise git elong without Sary. She's brightened up the house ever sence she come here. It 'pears as ef we couldn't live without her, she's so lightsome—and good too," she added, with happy tears in her eyes. "Only t' other night she was kinder runnin' her grandpa about his white hat, which he will wear. You know his feelin's about it." (Ma'm Pettis nodded assent with an air of feminine toleration for a masculine weakness). "Wall, you'd ought to have seen that dear child when I had said a few words to her about it! After grandpa got through tellin' her all about how his own pa had the hat made for himself at a big expense, and had worn it till he died, she got right up and put her arms 'round his neck jest as her ma used to, and kissed him so sweet, tellin' him, 'You're my own, best grandpa; and I shall tell the girls that I wouldn't have you wear any other best hat for the world.' Now wasn't that beautiful?"

Aunt Becky wiped her eyes, and her still fresh face looked as bright as an April sky after a shower. Then she added:—

"You must stay to supper. Sary's makin' a shortcake, and I want you to see how good it is. She's takin' to cookin' amazin' well, and loves to do it. Saves me a deal of work sence my ankle's been lame."

This excellent, simple-hearted couple, cheerful as they were, had their sore trials, which they bore so patiently that even their neighbors did not know of their extent.

In their earlier married life that scourge, the scarlet fever, had taken away three of their children in one season; yet they lived to see that death was kindly, compared with a sorrow and trouble that came to them through their eldest born. Piece by piece, a large portion of the fine farm his father had inherited was sold to meet the extravagance of this son, who had taken to bad ways through the influence of evil companions in a city where he had commenced business under favorable circumstances. Continuing a downward career from bad to worse, he sank out of life, a blighted being whose death—both for himself, let us hope, and his family—was a relief. Fortunately, he never married: and when the end came his parents felt that this was cause for thankfulness, even in their bitter sorrow for his untimely end.

Their only daughter, to whom, with the son, they had given the advantage of a good education, married and settled in an adjoining state. There she died in the flush of womanhood, leaving her only child to the care of her parents.

People said Uncle Nathan and Aunt Becky would spoil their grandchild with over-indulgence; but they were mistaken. Never was there a sweeter girl than she, though not, it must be confessed, without some very human faults.

Uncle Nathan—himself an only child—had remained at home with his father. Having more love for farming than for book learning, he had worked on the place, and there he brought his bride, pretty Becky Harlow. The old gentleman, who had been a widower for many years, took kindly to his daughter-in-law and made her new home as pleasant as she could have desired. Twenty-six years previous to this sketch he suddenly died at an advanced age, leaving Nathan heir to the estate, then one of the most valuable farms in that section of country.

But for his son's dissipation he would still have been in easy circumstances; though Uncle Nathan was never a man to push business, being content to go in a beaten track, making only a comfortable living on his acres, year by year.

At this time, owing to his having been laid up two seasons in succession, first with a slow fever and next with rheumatism, he was cramped for money to meet needful expenses.

The outbuildings needed repairs, and the house, over a century old, yet still strong, was being injured for want of new shingles on the back roof.

"It'll cost a fortin' to do all that's needed," Uncle Nathan said to Aunt Becky. "The whole roof rea'ly wants coverin', and I dunno but we'll have to sell off the south medder. Lawson wants it."

"Don't pa," said his wife. "I can't bear to think of losin' that."

"Nor I neither; p'raps I can borry the money at the bank; but then we'll have it to pay with interest hyme bye. We won't take Sary's hundred dollars; it's all she's got, sence her pa died. Mebby some way'll be opened." Saying this, Uncle Nathan went out to finish planting his potatoes, but with a less cheerful mind than he was wont to have.

This was a dark time for Uncle Nathan and his wife. Hitherto they had managed to keep out of debt, and to live comfortably from the proceeds of their few remaining acres. Aunt Becky's flock of fowls and the butter from her two cows had helped to pay extra expenses; but now a crisis was approaching which they did not see how they could meet.

It was a bright, cold morning in May, "too cold," the farmers said, "for the season." Aunt Becky was churning, and Sarah had gone to a neighbor's to obtain a recipe for a new kind of cake she wanted for her birthday party. This event was soon to occur, and, as she was out of school for the season she had been promised this treat.

Uncle Nathan had harnessed Major for a trip to town, and came in to change his clothes and get his white hat. "I b'lieve my head's gettin' smaller sence I had the rheumatics, or else it's losin' my hair so bad," he said, as he went into the bedroom with a piece of paper folded neatly in his hand. "I'm going to slip this under my hat linin' to fill it out a leetle."

He was gone a long time. The butter was taken out of the churn, and Aunt Becky was working it over, when Sarah came in with the recipe.

A consultation followed about the cake, Aunt Becky saying: "I guess grandpa will buy the raisins, you're so sot on it. I told him to, and you can wait till to-morrow mornin' before you put 'em in. The dough will have to rise twice, you know. We'll have to be very equinomical now; but I want you to have a nice time with the girls, and a handsome supper. But where's grandpa? It's gittin' late. What's the matter, pa?" she called out.

"Nothin'! I'll be out in a minit," was answered from the bedroom.

They were so absorbed in culinary matters that, when Uncle Nathan came out, they did not notice anything unusual in his manner.

"Now, pa, here's the butter pail, and don't let the chickens git uncovered. Them eggs are put up all safe; don't forgit the raisins. What you've got to sell will fetch a couple of dollars."

"Eggs have gone up to twenty-five cents," she said to Sarah, as she came in from the door.

Uncle Nathan chirruped to Major in an unusually lively manner, as he urged that staid old quadruped into an uncommonly rapid gait.

He met Deacon Jones at the store, and paid his church tax, that being one of his errands to town that day. Uncle Nathan never shirked his duty to the church. "Glad I met you here, 'twill save me goin' round to your house. Mis' Jones well? Pleased to hear it. Me? Oh, yis; I hain't ben so well for a long while as I be now. I have a great deal to be thankful for. '

"Uncle Nathan's as spry as a cricket to-day," was remarked as he left the store.

The subject of these remarks went over to Esquire Berkly's office. He was a man on the other side of sixty and still practicing his profession. Uncle Nathan had known him many years. A quarter of an hour later the two men were in the bank, where a conversation was carried on by telephone with an old banking house in the city of L. Fragments of this talk could be heard, such as, "What date?" "Yes." "Been advertised?" "No." "No claimant." "All safe." "No doubt all right."

Uncle Nathan could hardly contain his delight.

"Don't get too much excited, Nathan," warned Mr. Berkly. "Remember your father's sudden death at the railroad station on his return from making these deposits."

"Good fortin' or good Providence won't kill me," he replied, cheerily.

"The train leaves in half an hour. It will give us time to return on the four o'clock express," said Mr. Berkly, as they descended the bank steps.

Uncle Nathan usually came home from town in time for a late dinner; but just as he was driving off that morning he called back to his wife that he would be gone until night. She waited supper for him until she grew alarmed. At last the sound of wheels was heard in the lane, and going to the door, she called:—

"Is that you, pa?"

"Yes, I'm all right," came the cheery response.

When he entered the house he seemed greatly excited, and walking to the dresser, set his hat carefully down on it, an unusual thing for him to do.

"Why, pa, what's the matter?" she inquired.

"Oh, nothin', only the Lord's ben dretful good. You both jest look at that white hat! It all come from that. Now let us have supper, and afterwards I'll tell you all about it."

He asked a short but fervant blessing, and ate his supper hurriedly, keeping silent until he had finished.

"Now, Becky," he said, as he took out his leather money pouch, "we are rich! It's the Lord's doin's, I b'lieve; for ef we'd hed it before it would have all ben gone now."

He emptied the contents of the pouch upon the table—bank bills, gold, and silver.

"What in the world!" cried Aunt Becky, as she and Sarah gazed at the pile before them.

"There's a hundred and seventy-five dollars; and I gave Squire Berkly twenty-five of 'em for helpin' me about gittin' the money. Now, ma, you shall hev a silk gown"; and he handed her five crisp ten-dollar bills; "and Sary! here's two gold pieces for you; 'cause you said you loved grandpa and wanted him to wear his old white hat."

Aunt Becky gasped out: "Do tell us, pa, what in means?"

"Yes, I will. You know when father died, we all thought he had money laid up, besides that mortgage on Carson's place that he was cheated out of. Wall he did! When he come home from L. and died right there, as he got off the train, he'd ben investin' his money if bonds and stock. As I wasn't never on to pry into his business, I didn't know about this investment till this mornin.' I found a receipt covered with 'iled silk in his hat crown that he wore that day. Forty-eight hundred dollars, Becky! What do you think of that? In that blessed old hat all this time." His voice choked and he broke down, crying like a child—with Aunt Becky and Sarah for company.

Sarah was the first to move from the table where she had sat hunched into a little heap of amazement. She went straight to the dresser and, taking up the white hat, as if it were a living thing, she patted it and kissed it with enthusiasm, saying: "You darling, blessed, old hat! Grandpa shall wear you as long as he lives." And he did.

Ma'm Pettis told the whole neighborhood about it before she slept that night. "I d'clare, I never wuz so beat in all my life! you could a knocked me down with a feather! I jest stepped into Aunt Becky's to borry a little yeast; an', sure ez you're born, they wuz all down on their knees, a-thankin' the Lord for 'unexpected blessin's'—leastwise Uncle Nathan wuz a-sayin' it. And would you b'lieve? 'twuss all on account of their good fortin', a-comin' from Graffer Brewer's old white hat, that Uncle Nathan's ben a wearin' mor'n twenty years! Money papers wuz struck inter the linin' uv it that's a-goin' to make him and Aunt Becky rich. Wall, they deserve blessin's, ef any folks dooz; but ain't it the curiousest thing to hev' 'em come from that Old White Hat?"—Rev. Mary C. Billing, in the Independent.

SOME ARTISTS' ECCENTRICITIES.

There is probably no profession in the whole range of human effort in which more eccentric things are done by its followers than in that of the painter. The following stories culled from various sources indicate the truth of this assertion, and will be found amusing as well:—

Delacroix, the painter, was walking out one day in Paris with a friend of his, when he fell into a brown study.

"What is up with you now?" said the friend.

"I can't get a certain shade of yellow," replied the artist.

"What sort of yellow?"

Just then a cab drove past.

"The very thing!" the painter gasped out. "Stop! stop!"

"I am engaged," the cabby replied, without stopping.

Delacroix started in pursuit, and at a steep place in the Rue des] Martyrs overtook the cab. Opening the door, he said in tones of entreaty to the passenger inside:—

"Do please tell your driver to stop; I want your complexion for a painting on which I am at work. There is a color merchant close at hand. I shall not detain you above five minutes, and in acknowledgment of the service you render me I will present you with a sketch of my picture."

The bargain was struck; Delacroix got his yellow, and a few months later the "fare" received a sketch of his "Assassination of the Archbishop of Liege.

Another artist, celebrated in his day as a successful painter of portraits, while making a counterfeit presentment of a lady, perceived that when he came to draw the mouth she tried to render it smaller by contracting her lips.

"Pray do not trouble yourself so much, madam," he exclaimed. "If you like, I will draw your face without any mouth at all.

A somewhat eccentric individual was the Flemish painter Craasbeck, of whom it is told that once, fearing that his wife had ceased to love him, and anxious to discover if his fears were founded on fact, he resolved upon an extraordinary test. He tore his blouse from his chest and painted just above his heart a very vivid representation of a wound. He then painted his cheeks and lips so that they presented a ghastly aspect, covered his palette knife and his garments with spots of red paint, gave a shriek, and fell to the floor as if dead. The test was successful. Madame Craasbeck, hearing the shriek, rushed into the room, and supposing that her husband had been killed or had killed himself, gave way to what was to the supposed victim on the floor a series of very gratifying outbursts of grief. What the lady said when her lord and master sat up and informed her that he was only shamming, history does not record; but if she failed to go from one extreme to the other and give him a round scolding, she certainly missed a great opportunity, and showed herself a woman of marvelous self-control.—Harper's Young People.

"PSALMON."

A lady who buys provisions regularly of a dealer in Boston, was a little puzzled over one of the items in her monthly bill. The item was as follows:

"To 3 lbs. psalmon, 90."

It suddenly occurred to the lady that she had purchased three pounds of salmon on the date given, and the meaning of the mysteriously spelled word was apparent to her.

Greatly amused and feeling well enough acquainted with the provision dealer to tell him of the little laugh she had enjoyed at his expense, she went to pay the bill.

"Mr. Blank, I had quite a laugh over the way some one in your establishment spells 'salmon.'"

When the item had been pointed out to him Mr. Brown said in a tone of contempt for such ignorance:

"That's the work of a new bookkeeper I have. I'm ashamed to have such bills sent out, and I shall have to speak to him about it. He is a good bookkeeper, but he's got to learn to spell if he stays in my employ. Let me correct the bill. Taking a pen Mr. Brown drew several lines across the word and wrote above it:

"Sammon."

"There, ma'am," he said complacently, handing back the bill, "I'll teach that bookkeeper how to spell 'salmon' when he comes in or tell him to find a new place.—Times and News Letter.

INTEREST OF WOMEN.

A FEW SPRING STYLES.

Dress Goods. All wool French Challies will be very popular this summer. Cream, coffee, fawn, drab, lavender and light browns and light greens are the principal grounds in delicate colors, with flower clusters two or more inches across laid on rather close together; the colors of the flowers harmonize rather than contrast with the ground color of the goods, as, for instance, a lavender ground has a bunch of pale violets, a coffee ground of daisies or flowers in a brownish tint, a pale pink ground has roses a few shades deeper. Most of the flowers are printed in natural colors, but so artistic is the harmony that none of these challies appear gaudy. The dark grounds, brown, navy, green, black, drab, have tiny figures, many of them conventional in form, and much farther apart, showing more of the ground than the more delicate goods. The figures are simple, and altho' there is a greater contrast in dark than in the delicate shades the effect of the dark challies is also very modest. The novelties in challies have satin stripes of the shade of the ground. This is a new fancy this season. These goods are very handsome. These figured challies are trimmed with plain challie the shade of the ground, or with satin, moire, or bengaline, of the same shade, with bows of ribbon.

A great many summer silks are shown, such as were so much worn twenty years ago. There are the pretty steel grays with black or white stripes or figures, browns, blues, and many changeable silks with tiny figures. Lace laid on flat over ribbon or silk is largely used in trimming these dresses. There are sets of lace or embroidery consisting of a band for the high collar and attached to this vandyke points radiating from the band to be sewed to the yoke of the gown. One beautiful coffee colored suit had a yoke and collar of magenta velvet; around over the collar was a band of Irish crochet lace with points attached, one behind, one on each shoulder, one in front and one between the front and back and the shoulder points, making eight in all, radiating from the collar band. This creamy lace toned down the brightness of the velvet, and the effect was very becoming and stylish. The sleeves of this suit were rather novel. The puff at the top of the sleeve was cut in a perfect circle with the armsize cut out in its center. This form made it without gathers at the shoulder, but very full at the elbow. It was lined with crinoline and stood out like Queen Elizabeth's sleeves. It was fastened just above the elbow under a band of magenta velvet about an inch broad, and there was another band about the wrist. Below the yoke the waist was full and folded around in surplice fashion, with a row of tiny magenta velvet bows about an inch apart following the closing from the lower front part of the yoke to the under arm seam. There was a belt of magenta velvet covered with lace, and a band of the same around the plain flaring skirt. With this suit was worn a coffee hat trimmed with ecru lace, coffee ribbon and magenta velvet flowers.

Magenta appears in flowers and ribbons upon hats for young women, and so far as my observation goes the young women and girls about Boston wear much more of this color than appeared last year.

All the fashion books and all the dress makers and all the milliners say brown is the color for the coming season, yet I see no more browns displayed in the stores than is usual at this time of the year, nor are there more brown suits worn. I cannot say what another month may develop. The cold weather keeps the new spring suits indoors. I have seen several lovely new green suits of the most soft delicate shades in fine new materials. Cashmeres and other soft goods will be much worn. This is singular for one reason—the skirts are all stiff and stand out, but when overskirts come in soft goods that drape gracefully are always in vogue; and overskirts are fairly in. The underskirt is flared and has the back breadths and around the bottom in front lined with stiff crinoline, muslin, canvas or hair-cloth. The overskirts are long, medium, or short, as you please. The long draperies, some of them follow the outline of the skirt and are draped up a few inches at the right or at the left side, or perhaps on both sides; other draperies are cut curved up on both sides with no draping; still others are merely upper skirts trimmed about the bottom, extending to perhaps five or six inches of the bottom of the skirt. Only tall ladies, however, wear these straight-around overdraperies. The medium overskirts are cut pointed, with a deep sharp point in front extending nearly to the bottom of the skirt, and one or two points behind and open to the waist. Some skirts are trimmed with braid or ruffles arranged in points to similate overskirts. Then there are short pointed or rippled panniers. Ripples are the one prevailing style. Ripple collars, ripple brettelles, ripple basques and ripple ruffles. These ripples may ripple much or they may ripple little. They are rippled by cutting the collar, brettelle, basque or ruffle curving. You can buy mad elace, silk, satin and crepon rippling by the yard. Ruffling cut around a circle and then straightened out so that one edge is straight and the other ripples. Many of these laces are beaded. The black with jets and spangles, the white with "pearl" beads, and there are cream and coffee and other delicate colored ripple ruffling. These appear on capes and lace and silk gowns. Although all the books and dressmakers say the dolman with long tabs is coming in, still the circular capes, as yet, seem more popular. The heavier capes have rippled or plaited or plaited-rippled moire around the shoulders with a plaiting or rippling or turn-over collar about the neck fastened under the chin with a big bow of moire ribbon with long ends. These bows are also worn with jackets. They may be made of ribbon four inches wide or of ribbon twelve inches wide or of any width between. Some are cut straight across ends, some ends are pointed in the middle and some are pointed on one side. They usually have either broad black or broad white lace ruffled very full on the ends. I have seen a few with the rippled lace on the ends. Some of these scarf ends reach to the waist, some reach to the knees. Besides the black moire ribbon bows, white mull ties made in exactly the same way are seen. The mull ties may tie around the neck with a big bow under the chin, or may be made with a big bow and fastened at the neck of the cape or jacket. The ends of the mull ties are not so long as the black ties, and are hemmed or finished with white lace or embroidery.

Ties of delicate shades of fancy silks made in the same fashion are shown, but you see upon the streets more of the black moire or surah ties.

Big hats and small hats and small bonnets are worn. The large hats have either very flat brims or very rippled brims. The smaller hats have coronets or flat, narrow brims and narrow strings. The bonnets have small coronets or rippled fronts. The rippled bonnets are of lace or jet or very openwork braids. There are many fancy braids, some with round, low, flat crowns, some with crown curved to fit the head. A few hats and bonnets have a short pointed crown. These are worn by the ladies who dress their hair in the tight twisted built-up coils so much liked by young women (and some older women) just now.

This style of dressing the hair is certainly becoming and effective, and a twist of ribbon or velvet about the coil or a knot of ribbon in the fluffy front hair is also very becoming.

PALMER NEWS.

THE JOURNAL'S NEW PORTFOLIO.

A Visit to Every Part of America for Only 10 Cents a Week.

Readers of the JOURNAL will be glad to learn that arrangements have been made whereby they can secure, for almost nothing, the most magnificent pictorial publication, descriptive and illustrative of the marvelous scenery of our country, ever printed. This charming work is entitled "Glimpses of America," and embodies a narrative of a tour taken by J. W. Buel, the well-known author, accompanied by a corps of three expert photographers, who in a specially equipped photographic car travelled a distance of 25,000 miles and visited every picturesque district of the United States and Canada. This great tour occupied nearly two years and involved an expense of $50,000, but the result is gratifying far beyond its cost, since though Mr. Buel's eloquent descriptions and the superb views which illustrate his work, Americans are made acquainted with the incomparably grand, wonderful, and marvelously beautiful scenery of their native land. No previous publication, nor any that is likely to soon appear, can be compared with "Glimpses of America" in its completeness of American views and the charm of Mr. Buel's narrative. By it the reader is conducted upon thirty-two consecutive excursions, following the journeyings of the author into the almost inaccessible as well as easily approached regions, through canons, over mountains, into caverns, to volcano peaks, down charming valleys, across crystalline lakes, by train, boat, donkey, and afoot. The tour takes in every part of America consecutively across the continent, far north to Alaska, eastward through New England, over into Canada, and thence to Florida. Other books have been published on American scenery, carelessly written and illustrated with such views as may be purchased of dealers in photographs. "Glimpses of America" is an original work, written by one of the best known authors of this country, and illustrated with nearly 600 original photographs, taken by high-priced artists. Besides these diversified and numerous views, the work will be further illustrated with eight superb cameragraphs, an invention of the publishers, which are photographs taken by a process which shows the pictures in their natural colors. They are the most beautiful specimens of color work ever seen, and cannot be imitated. "Glimpses of America" will be published in thirty-two parts, and issued weekly to our subscribers at the exceedingly small price of 10 cents and one coupon for each part. Each part will contain sixteen or more photographs, and graphic descriptive narrative that is intensely interesting. The art supplement which accompanies the JOURNAL this week is the cameragraph which appears in No. 1, which is now ready, containing eighteen superb half-tone engravings, the size of the page being 11¼ by 13½. Don't fail to get a copy of part 1.

A Disappointed Congregation.

A large audience was present at the Baptist church last Sunday, expecting to hear Rev. S. T. Frost preach his farewell sermon, which many imagined would be particularly spicy on account of the dissensions of the past three months. Mr. Frost opened the service in the usual manner until the time for the sermon was reached, when he remarked that by the Scriptural injunction people were adjured not to be fearful of entertaining strangers, for thereby some had entertained angels unawares, and stated that he had found it so, for on the previous evening he had entertained a man who had come to him, and should ask him to preach the sermon of the day, whereupon a man rose from the audience and ascended the pulpit steps. He proved to be Rev. Mr. Cleveland, missionary of the Baptist state convention. After the sermon Mr. Frost stated that as many had asked what he proposed to do, he would say that owing to the severe nervous strain under which he had been laboring for some time he should rest for a while. After the morning services a meeting of the church members was held, at which fifteen, including Mr. Frost, his wife and daughter, asked for letters of dismissal from the church, Mr. Frost and family asking for letters to the Tremont Baptist church of Boston, so that his return to this place is improbable, even in the event of the formation of a new church. Various officers in the Sunday school and Young People's Union have resigned.

Those who have withdrawn from the church announce the following meetings, to be held at the house of A. S. Campbell on South Main street: Next Sunday at 10.45 a. m., prayermeeting; At 1.45 p. m., preaching service; Tuesday at 7.30 p. m., prayer meeting; Thursday at 7.30 p. m. prayer meeting. Next Friday evening a business meeting will be held to consider the subject of organizing a people's church in this village, and all interested in such a move are invited to be present.

Rev. W. H. Eaton of Boston will preach in the Baptist church next Sunday.

Disastrous Forest Fire.

A forest fire which proved the worst for years started about 11 o'clock Monday forenoon in the wood lot owned by J. A. Palmer, west of Whipple's crossing on the Ware River road and south of the farm of Clark & Hastings. The fire was started by a spark from the 11 o'clock train over the Boston and Maine road. A gang of section hands in the employ of the road discovered it and after working awhile supposed they had it put out. It broke out again, however, and with the strong wind which was blowing swept along with almost irresistible force. Immense whirlwinds were created, and sticks of four-foot wood six inches in diameter were carried by them sometimes to a height of 30 feet, the suction at times being sufficient to take the sticks up endwise. Hugh clouds of heavy smoke hung over Thorndike, and the crackle and roar of the fire could be heard more than a mile distant. Fully 100 acres was burned over, and about 575 cords of wood, cut and ready for market, are now ashes. Mr. Palmer estimates his loss at $2000, with no insurance. There is no question as to the origin of the fire, and the Boston and Maine railroad will be asked to settle the bill. A duty call was rung on the fire alarm about 2.30, and a large force of men went from here to fight the fire, which was finally got under control about 6 o'clock.

The Converse House Changes Hands.

E. R. Pierce, who has been the proprietor of the Converse House for two years and seven months, has sold the hotel to H. B. Lord of Athol and William Fitzpatrick of Palmer, the latter having been with Mr. Pierce for the last eighteen months. Mr. Pierce has kept an excellent hostelry during his stay in town, and has won many friends who will be sorry that he is to leave Palmer. Mr. Lord is an experienced hotel man and will have the active management of the house, and without doubt will maintain the past high grade of the hotel. The change takes place May first. Mr. Pierce has not yet decided what he will do, but will probably board at the hotel for a while.

H. P. Holden has sent his pacer, "Roscoe," record 2 29¼, to Springfield, to be handled by W. A. Baggs, with his string of fast horses this season.

H. C. Strong was somewhat injured Tuesday afternoon by being thrown from a load of hay on Main street by the falling of a portion of the load.

Twelve members of the bicycle club went on the club run to Monson last evening, where they were received by about 35 of the Monson wheelmen.

The game of ball yesterday afternoon between the Palmer high school nine and the nine from the school at Ware resulted in a victory for the Palmers, 20 to 4.

The new holiday, Patriot's Day, passed off quietly yesterday. The majority of the business places were closed in the afternoon, and the banks were closed for all day.

At the meeting of the bicycle club Tuesday evening A. E. Fitch was chosen captain, H. W. Smith first lieutenant, and Ernest Tufts of Wilbraham second lieutenant.

The ladies of the Baptist society entertained an unusually large number at their pink tea last Friday evening, feeding about 300 with a most excellent supper. About $30 was cleared.

A delegation from Thomas Lodge of Masons went to Warren yesterday afternoon to attend the exemplification of the work of the lodges of this district. Thomas lodge worked the first degree and gave the lecture of the third degree.

The north track of the Boston and Albany road between this station and West Brimfield has been used by trains going in both directions a part of the week, the south track being relaid with the new rails weighing 100 pounds to the yard.

The JOURNAL presents a handsome art supplement to each reader this week. It is one of eight which will appear in connection with the portfolio "Glimpses of America," the first number being ready this week, announcement of which will be found on the sixth page.

Mrs. C. E. Little was thrown from a carriage on Main street near the bridge over the railroad Tuesday noon, the horse taking fright at the sudden puffing of a locomotive under the bridge which was so quiet up to that moment as to be unnoticed. Fortunately she was not injured.

The selectmen have as yet made no appointment of night police for this village or Thorndike, being on the lookout for just the right parties. The men are to be on duty from 6 o'clock in the evening to midnight, and the pay is $400 a year, no officer's fees being paid if arrests are made.

The selectmen have purchased a new scraper for use on the highways, paying $250 for it. The one which has been in use for several years is getting rather old, besides, there are so many miles of road to care for that one machine could not go over them all until long after every piece of road should be attended to.

The firemen were called out at 11.45 Sunday morning for a forest fire on the land of J. M. Converse, just east of the Thorndike street cemetery. The blaze was not serious, however, and was under control in a short time. This land receives an almost yearly burning over, sometimes two or three fires occurring in one season.

L. L. Merrick post of the Grand Army has made partial arrangements for the observance of Memorial Day. Rev. F. E. Jenkins of the Congregational church will deliver the address, and the post will be accompanied on its round of the village by the Thorndike band, while the singing in the hall will be by a male quartette composed of Messrs. Weld, Taylor, Campbell and Clark. The post has not decided where to attend church on the Sunday evening preceding Memorial Day.

The report of the overseers of the poor, which has been made this week to the state authorities at Boston, shows that the whole number of families aided during the past year has been 81, comprising 410 persons, 182 of whom were children under the age of 16. Of those assisted 19 families comprising 105 persons were state charges, 10 families of 38 persons belonged to other towns, while 52 families of 242 persons belonged to the town of Palmer, aside from the 25 persons supported at the town farm.

A dangerous $10 counterfeit is said to be in circulation in this vicinity, which Palmer merchants would do well to look out for. It is a photographic reproduction of a bank note on the Fort Worth National Bank at Fort Worth, Tex., signed by B. K. Bruce, register of the treasury, and A. U. Wyman, treasurer of the United States. It is printed on check bank note paper. There are also in circulation two counterfeit $20 bank notes, and one on the First national bank of Bowie, Tex., and the South Bend National Bank of South Bend, Tex.

At the district court last Saturday two Palmer drunks had their cases placed on probation until the 26th of May, while two from Monson paid fines of $5 and $6 respectively. Another from Monson paid $10 on Tuesday. On Monday Ezra Provost of Bratleboro was adjudged insane and committed to the asylum at Northampton. He was found wandering about the streets last Friday, claiming to belong everywhere, and saying that he had a wife and children down at the express office but that the agent would not give them to him.

The Hampden District Medical Society held its annual meeting and dinner at the Massasoit House in Springfield Tuesday afternoon, about 50 members being present. Dr. Holbrook of Palmer was elected one of the censors, and Dr. G. E. Fuller of Monson one of the delegates to the American Medical Association. The society voted to make its next meeting a special meeting, and hold it at the state primary school, Dr. Holbrook having invited the society to visit the school. Among the new members elected was Dr. J. H. Lawrence of Three Rivers.

It was rather a motley procession that entered the village from the west by Main street Tuesday afternoon, and many turned out to see it. From a distance it looked like a gypsy band breaking camp, with all the vehicles belonging to the party hitched together, but as it drew nearer Deputy Sheriff Studley was seen to be in the van with his team, while strung along behind were several vehicles of greater or less antiquity and of somewhat uncertain soundness, while in the rear of the last one sat Frank Allen leading a couple of cows. It was a lot of mortgaged property of Mrs. Jane Smith's, which had been foreclosed upon.

The appropriation at the annual meeting of the fire district of $500 for the purchase of a bell for the fire alarm was made with the expectation that a bell weighing about 2400 pounds could be had for the money, but it is probable that the district will secure a larger bell for less money. In many of the large cities, where the men are in the engine houses every hour of the day, the large bells are being taken out, and only the small gongs used, hence these bells can be had for much less money that a new one of the same weight, while being just as good. It is possible that one weighing about 3000 pounds will be placed on the engine house tower.

At the New England Methodist conference held at Waltham, the following clergymen were appointed in this part of the Springfield district: Belchertown and Dwight's, S. A. Bragg; Bondsville, F. J. Hale, returned; Glendale and Hampden, to be supplied; Ludlow Center, G. W. Simonson, returned; Ware, A. M. Osgood, returned; Warren, First church, H. B. King, returned; West Warren, W. H. Dockham; Wilbraham, F. Nichols, returned; Wales, to be supplied. Benjamin Gill, professor in state college, Pennsylvania, member of Wilbraham quarterly conference; W. R. Newell, principal of Wesleyan academy, member of the quarterly conference of Wilbraham.

The forest fire above Thorndike Monday afternoon demonstrated one thing, the necessity of telephonic communication with the chief of the fire department. Had he been notified of the fire earlier in the day, much of the territory which was burned over might have been kept from the flames, and considerable property saved. As long as the firemen are compelled to go when called upon inside the limits of the town, the quickest means of communicating with them should be provided. The matter of a telephone for the chief engineer has been advocated before, but none has been given. It lies in the power of the selectmen to provide one if they will, paying for the same from the contingent fund. As the cost of the instrument would be only $36, it would be a good investment for the town.

The streets of the village are getting extremely dusty, and the need of the watering cart is felt. Mr. Converse claims that it does not pay him run it, and offers in evidence numerous unsettled agreements to pay for the watering, some of which have quite an odor of antiquity about them. Then, too, there is a lack of unanimity of feeling regarding the street watering question, and it does not seem just for one merchant to pay liberally for the service while his next door neighbor will not contribute a cent, though he has the benefit just the same. If each merchant along the business streets, and every property owner along the residence streets to be sprinkled would agree to pay a fair proportion of the cost according to their holdings, they would be surprised to find how little it would cost them to have the dust nuisance abolished.

There is one thing which the board of health might well have incorporated in its set of rules, recently put in force, and that is one to prohibit the keeping of swine within certain limits in the several villages. There are greater difficulties in the way in towns than in cities, however, and the board did not think it wise to make a move in this direction now. There are places in this village which are a nuisance to the community, as well as dangerous to the public health, and should be looked after sharply. Probably there are similar cases in each of the other villages. No person should be allowed to maintain a foul-smelling pig-pen in any place where the stench can reach and offend his neighbors, and while the board of health will not generally prohibit the keeping of swine in the villages, individual aggravated cases will undoubtedly be looked after and the nuisance abated.

The spring meeting of the Hampden Conference of Congregational churches will be held with the Second Congregational church in this village next Wednesday, when the following programme will be presented:

A large number of Palmer people were summoned to Worcester last week as witnesses in the case of A. H. Proctor against Charles Whitney, both of Gardner, to recover $10,000 for defamation of character. Proctor was superintendent of the Gardner almshouse, and just before he was to retire from the management it burned. Whitney was chairman of the board of overseers of poor, and it was alleged claimed that Proctor set the fire. Proctor was warden at the Palmer town farm some 15 years ago, and there was trouble over his departure. From Palmer he went to Hardwick, then to Warren, where the house was burned, then to Gardner. There was more or less trouble with him there, and he was ordered to vacate in favor of a newly-hired man, but before his time was out the building burned. Numerous witnesses were summoned by the defense from Palmer, Warren and Hardwick, who were expected to testify as to Proctor's character, but Mr. Whitney, the defendant, died on Tuesday night of last week.

Number 13 of the "Magic City" is one of the finest, because of its views of exhibits and interior decorations, although not all the pages are devoted to this class of illustrations, which comprise a view of the center of the French statuary section, the Ho-o-den building erected by Japan, the Santa Maria or flagship of Columbus, the White Horse Inn, the Johore Bungalow village, representatives of the Dahomian cannibals, a view of the German educational exhibit, a 2000-horse-power engine in the machinery building, the greatest locomotive in England, a wonderful decoration in grains and grasses in Agricultural Hall, a view of the Spanish statuary section, interior of the Forestry building, the route of the Intramural Railway and general view of the south end of the grounds, Michigan's grain display and South Dakota's exhibit, agricultural products of California and Oklahoma, and a charming view across the lagoon of the transportation building. Handsome bindings have been prepared for the series, and can be had at this office. The numbers can be inserted by anyone, and thus kept from being torn or soiled. There are two styles, one in silk cloth, handsomely lettered in silver on front and back, and the other in imitation morocco, lettered in gold, at 50 cents and $1 respectively. Or they will be sent to any address, carriage to be paid by the recipient.

Editor of the Journal:—Being a reader of your paper I noticed an article in last week's issue written by Mr. C. A. Brown, and wish to correct such portion of same as is not consistent with the facts in the case relative to our company. The reason of the firm's removal to Worcester was not wholly on account of the rum business in Palmer, but I would say that with 9 years' experience in manufacturing, half of which was spent in Palmer, we have found that it is much easier to conduct a fairly good sized business in a city where there is a surplus of help at nearly all times, then in a town where a manufacturer is often forced to hire rum heats which he would not look at in a city where there are a large number of sober unemployed laborers, skilled in nearly every branch of industry. As a matter of fact, we have had less trouble here with rum among our help than we had in Palmer, where we only employed about one-fourth as many hands. Nor is the statement true that the business had to be moved to Worcester to please any new stockholder residing in Worcester, because the Messrs. Wright hold considerably more stock than all the other stockholders together. There are several stockholders who reside in a different part of the state. More than this, the present plant was leased on a long time lease by us more than a year and a half before we occupied it or knew any of the new stockholders, and it was generally known in Palmer for more than a year that we intended to move the business to Worcester. The article also stated that the saloon ratio of Worcester and Palmer was as 15 to 1, but neglected to state what the ratio of population was. As to shipping facilities, we formerly teamed small loads through mud and over poor roads to the freight houses, while now we can carry double the load on pavements, and the average distance to the five completing railway lines is less, and we get free switching of cars to our doors from four of the railroads. In making this answer I simply doso to correct such misstatements as appeared in relation to our affairs; being a non-resident I have no personal interest at present in the liquor question of the town.

GEO. M. WRIGHT.

A Plea for a Larger Christian Union in Palmer.

An extract of a sermon preached by Rev. H. F. Moulton in St. Paul's Universalist church last Sunday evening.

"I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that you walk worthy of the vocation wherewith you are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love. Endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."—Ephesians iv. 1, 2, 3.

Religious papers, magazines and addresses are frequently appealing in editorials, essays and eloquent words for a larger unity among the different religious sects in thought and work. These appeals, coming as they do, not only from one denomination, but from many, are prophetic of what is to take place when scholarship and discipleship reaches nearer the ultimate standards of truth and Christian living.

Some of us are pained in mind and heart when we try to estimate the loss to the cause of humanity through the inharmonious divisions of the Christian church. Think of the almost numberless Christian sects because of doctrinal and ecclesiastical opinions. They divide and subdivide until it is reported that there are two sects of Dunkards,—the one-button sect and the two-button sect,—one holding that it is worldly to wear more than one row of buttons on the coat, and the other allowing a Christian liberty of two. This is the reason why the unity which has existed between religious denominations of the same village or city has been like the unity in the old deacon's church, who said that their church quarrels if had become frozen—"frozen clear through from top to bottom." The unity of the past, because of doctrinal and ecclesiastical differences, has been the unity of death, not the unity of life.

I. Christian unity in thought will be of slow growth, but it is sure to develop as truth advances into a symmetrical and fruitful tree, whose leaves will be for the healing of the wounds of error. If we should sit down in "sweet reasonableness" and compare the real and living doctrines of the various denominations, there would not be much difference as some of us might anticipate. Not one of the denominations is in theological thought what it was a few years ago. Some of their written and dead creeds may remain the same, but their unwritten and living creeds are more unified. The saying of the Scotchman who was brought up a Presbyterian, and who became a Unitarian, well illustrates this change of theological thought: "My mother carried Calvin in her head and Christ in her heart; though I no longer follow Calvin, I am loyal to my mother's heart religion; I follow Christ." The theology of the past, formulated by such men as Calvin, is being considered untenable in many parts by a majority in all denominations, and the theology of Christ is receiving the attention and acceptance of the Christian world. This advancement of a larger unity in theological thought—for the fear of ecclesiastical councils and the lack of individual courage of convictions is not as pronounced in public speech as in private conversation, but there are those not fearing councils, nor lacking in courage, who say with Dr. Phillip Moxom, recently installed over a Congregational church, "I cherish with increasing strength of conviction the reasonableness of the larger hope." Also this scholarly and pious ex-Baptist says, "A statement (theological) that should be exact and exhaustive to-day would be inexact and inexhustive to-morrow. 'God plants us where we grow.'" Words like these unmistakably point to the trend of theological thought that is secretly cherished by so many in every church, and that causes only a slight commotion when it breaks forth in sincerity and love from the lips of the clergy and laymen of the Roman Catholic, Congregational, Baptist, Methodist and Universalist churches. Gradually then, as all must admit, the several denominations are becoming nearer together in their doctrinal thought as regards God, Christ and man. There is a living unity being realized. "Every denomination which hold to Christ the head," says Dr. Philip Schaff, "Must cheerfully recognize the excellencies and merits of the other branches of the kingdom. No sect has a monopoly of truth."

II. Christian unity in work advances with this unity in thought. The time has been when the theological thought of some of our denominations has been so narrow that all cooperation in work was sacrificed on the altar of theological bigotry. This unchristian and anti-Christian condition of things, much to the advancement of the Christian cause, is passing away. A more friendly feeling and a wider recognition of the "excellencies and merits" of each denomination characterizes a tendency in them all. Cardinal Gibbons of the Roman Catholic church, at the Parliament of Religions, wisely said: "Though we do not agree on matters of faith, there is one platform on which we are all united, it is the platform of charity, of humanity and of mutual benevolence." The growing recognition that there is a common Christian work, and that it can be done better cooperately than separately, is bringing together the workers in all churches. Ministers and laymen in villages and cities when this Christian union is gently but solidly welding this common work of all churches, consult, plan and work as one in special religious services, and along charitable and mission lines. There is power enough in the churches of any place, by united action, to make the citadels of evil tremble and to bring "the shadow ten degrees backward" on the dial of morality. "It certainly is a great idea," writes Dr. Schaff to the American Evangelical Alliance, "The deep movement in the churches to a greater unity and fellowship for its own sake, as well as for more effectual testimony against the common foe." One must be unobserving who cannot discern the signs of the times. All communions are coming to understand each other better in thought and work. This union is converting religious bigotry and church jealousy into the powers of knowledge and sympathy, instead of allowing them to waste strength in fruitless discussions and selfish proselytism.

It has been my privilege to study and to have an active part in the advancement of the kingdom of truth and righeousness for more than two years in this town. While undoubtedly we may be behind some places in Christian union, yet it is growing in both thought and work among all the churches. If not among the clergy, surely it is among the laity. My appeal, then, is for the clergy and the laity of these churches to study, not the past, put the present theological views of each other, and to seek for a closer friendship with each other by an exchange of pupils and by coöperative Christian work, not only along the line of temperance, but along every line of good work, social, reformatory, charitable or spiritual. A relationship like this would free each of us from religious bigotry, our churches from jealousy and proselytism. It would make us more highly appreciative of each other's thought and work; it would make us more Christian. No man ever uttered truer and kindlier words than these, spoken by an eminent church historian, "Christians must learn to esteem and love one another in spite of the distinctive peculiarities of the different denominations, and must wish each other God-speed."

While returning from Palmer and on that portion of the road which runs close to the railroad, Mr. Burrows's horse became frightened and ran, throwing both men out. The wagon, which was loaded with lumber, passed over Mr. Burrows, dragging him quite a distance. Mr. Story was not so fortunate; as he was thrown out one of his feet got caught in the wheels, spraining his foot and ankle badly and necessitating confinement to the house for several days.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, April 18, 1894.

The liquor trade has once more assumed the garb of virtue and come to the state house as a patriot and as a temperance man to secure the repeal of the license limitation law. The liquor interest wanted the law repealed because there is more drinking with the number of saloons limited than there would be without. Take off the limit and let any one get a license, then so many would go into business that some of them could not stand the competition. They would fail and their saloons would be closed, thus resulting in a clear gain for temperance and morality. Again, it is against the spirit of our American institutions to interfere with the personal liberty of a man. If he wants to drink, he has a moral and a patriotic right to do it. Again, the teetotallers want the limitation law repealed because the rivalry for licenses brings so much corruption into city politics. A thousand total abstainers of Lowell were said to be petitioners for the repeal of the law. But in spite of the moralty and patriotism of the liquor trade, the house did not seem to be deeply impressed with this assumption of virtue and voted by a large majority to keep the law as it is.

The "watchdogs of the treasury" are wide awake. They are against tearing down the state house this year. They favor only one new normal school, instead of three, as proposed by the committee on education, and they have cut down from $160,000 to $100,000 the appropriation recommended by the committee on agriculture for the destruction of the gypsy moth. But their reports do not settle these contests. Five of their own number of 12 are in favor of pulling down the state house and erecting a new one. The friends of these places which have been selected for normal schools will be sure to combine to put their plans through, while the farmers have tales of woe to tell about the damages from the gypsy moth. Plenty of agricultural evidence was given by farmers themselves that they would rather be taxed their part of $160,000 than run the risk of the destruction of their crops by the gypsy moth.

The prison committee finds that Superintendent Jones cannot longer hold his office, on account of "grave indiscretions" or absolute improprieties of business management.

The House has had a taste of filibustering and is so well satisfied with it that no more is likely to occur. It happened over the bill to establish in Fall River a board of police like that which was established for Boston in 1885. At that time there was wilder confusion than has been seen in the House on any other occassion for a generation and it was only on the third day of filibustering by the Democrats that the Republicans, with Speaker Brackett in the chair, were able to force the bill through. This year the bill had been debated at length on the first stage and the Democrats had been badly beaten, as is inevitable on any party measure. On Monday Mr. Bullock of Fall River tried to get his bill out of the calendar and put it through at once. This stirred up the Democrats. They would not have objected if the bill had been taken out of the calendar and postponed, but they kicked against being overridden without notice. Mr. Moriarty of Worcester, Democrat, warned the Republicans that there would be filibustering if the Democrats were not allowed to debate at all. This fired up Mr. Wood of Boston who said the Democrats should not dictate to the Republicans what the house should do, and he moved the previous question. This was the very worst thing that he could have done, for the Democrats, unfortunately for the Republicans, were in the right of the dispute, as they only asked for a reasonable debate on the passage of the bill to be engrossed which was clearly within their parliamentary prerogatives. But the partisan temper was aroused and by successive steps, after repeated dilatory motions and three roll calls, the previous question was carried just at the hour for adjournment. Tuesday forenoon found the tempest still high, but a disposition on the part of the Republicans to give the Democrats fair play soon showed itself. The latter insisted that they did not want a long debate. The only way out of the trouble with honor and regard for future peace was for the Republicans to back out, and this could be reached only by unanimous consent, for the previous question had been ordered. Fortunately, the majority were bright enough to admit the soundness of the contention on the part of the Democrats. In an honorable way unanimous consent was given to postpone the bill to Wednesday afternoon. At the assigned hour the bill was taken up. An amendment to submit the bill to majority vote of Fall River, which had been shut out, was admitted. Debate continued only a few minutes. The Democrats won the recognition of their rights for which they had contested and the Republicans passed the bill over Democratic votes. But the affair has shown that filibustering is expensive business. This ought to last the Legislature 10 years at least.

It is certain that there will be stubborn contests over the reconstruction of the state house, over the appropriation of $165,000 to exterminate the gypsy moth and over the new normal schools. The committee on expense for these matters and the people who are pushing for them are determined to oppose the committee. If the state house is partly pulled down this year, as it will be under existing legislation, then people will be all the more disposed next year to see the rest torn down.

The expected bills have been reported to prevent stock watering by the corporations which derive privileges from the public. But it is not certain what fate they will encounter. In the House Wednesday afternoon an attempt to put on the Braintree street railway bill an amendment similar to the proposed corporation legislation was defeated by 67 to 70. If this is a criterion, then the corporation influence is already strong in the Legislature. Mr. Myers of Cambridge said on the floor of the House that the corporation influence was strongly felt already.

Great interest is felt in the bill to establish liquor license commissions in the cities, whose members shall be appointed by the governor. Reports are current at the state house of the horrible condition in which politics is in some cities on account of the rum business and people of both parties, particularly in Holyoke, are demanding that the liquor question be taken out of local politics. The bill has been put over to next week.

These are the days we need the street sprinkler. The dust is something awful, covering everything, so that on a warm day the merchants cannot keep their doors open. It has been suggested that a village improvement society be formed, and by a little judicious management all such things as these might be attended to without any serious outlay by any one individual. The plan as followed in other towns where there are such societies, is to raise money by means of entertainments, etc., given during the winter months, the proceeds to be used by the society for sprinkling the streets in summer, clearing the streets of snow in the winter, and any other purpose which may be expedient.

Monday at 1.30 p. m. is the time for the adjourned town meeting to convene. The plan adopted this year regarding appropriations makes it probable that all the business will not be settled Monday. The committee chosen to act on this matter and report Monday have organized with George H. Newton as chairman and A. D. Norcross as secretary. For several reasons it has not been thought best to report the recommendations of the committee, so it is impossible to form any idea as to whether they have been economical or extravagant. However this may be, the committee has worked hard to get out a schedule to suit the needs of the town, and it is hoped that the voters will adopt it as prepared. From the nature of the business to be transacted it is thought there will be a large attendance, also that the prepared schedule will not meet with any great amendments.

The "Dazzler" will be at the town hall again next Thursday.

A new boiler is being put in at the pumping station by H. D. Allen of Worcester.

Henry W. Cleveland has bought out a fruit, confectionary and ice cream store at Holyoke.

Henry B. Anderson has been appointed administrator of the estate of Edward N. Anderson.

The subject at the Methodist church Sunday morning will be "The Windows of Heaven Open," Mal. 3:10.

The old high school building has been remodeled for other schools, and Miss Crovell's has already moved there.

The junior and second year classes of the high school will give a reception to the seniors at the high school this evening.

The first rehearsal for the Old Folks' concert was held in the Methodist church on Wednesday evening with a large chorus present.

Miss Carrie Emerson, stenographer for the Otis Company for some years, has accepted a similar position at the Washington Mills at Lawrence.

A new street is being built from the pumping station to Pleasant street, and connection is being made this way with the Pleasant street water pipes.

There was a service in the Methodist church Thursday evening in honor of Patriot's Day, with an address by the pastor on "Lessons from Concord and Lexington."

Applications have been made for licenses to sell intoxicating liquors of any kind for medicinal, mechanical and chemical purposes only, by Richard B. Yale, Frank A. Spencer, and John D. Smith, all druggists in Ware.

The social dance by Hose 1 and 2 on Wednesday was not very largely attended, but enough to have an enjoyable time and leave something in the treasury after paying the bills.

Charles E. Blood was elected assessor Monday to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of B. F. Davis. The vote was 105 for Mr. Blood, 83 for Fred E. Farrar, 55 for James Moran.

It was voted at the town meeting Monday to accept the trust fund of $950 from the estate of James M. Earle, the income to be used in keeping his cemetery lot and monument in proper order.

Hamilton W. Mabie of New York, Editor of the Outlook, and an eminent author, will occupy the pulpit of the East Congregational church next Sunday forenoon, giving an address which will be especially interesting to young people.

E. A. Aldrich was taken to the asylum at Westboro on Wednesday. His family has the sympathy of the whole community in this great affliction. Mr. Aldrich was a man who had the confidence and respect of all who knew him.

Rev. James Boyle, pastor of All Saints' church, has accepted an invitation from Bishop Beaven of Springfield to accompany him to Rome, to be gone from Ware something like four months. Rev. John P. Leary will have charge of the Ware church during Father Boyle's absence.

William Eastwood died at the residence of J. E. Priest on South Main street Tuesday morning, in his 81st year. He was for many years boss carder for Gilbert & Stevens, and later for the Geo. H. Gilbert Company, and was a man who was greatly respected by all who knew him. He leaves a son and daughter.

The corner store in the Hampshire House block has been rented to J. H. Donnelly, the plumber, who expects to be in his new quarters by May first with a new stock of goods. His present stock is to be sold at auction Saturday, April 28th. The store is being remodeled and fitted especially for the business.

The Otis company has recently had put up and is now successfully working a cable way for taking cases of goods from the cloth, finishing and packing room across the river, 406 feet to the store house. The heaviest cases are hoisted in place and swung across the river very much more rapidly and with less labor than by the horse car system as heretofore. The inventor, Spencer Miller of New York, was here Tuesday inspecting the work, as in some respects this is different from any other cable way the company has ever erected.

CARD.—I wish to return heartfelt thanks for the kindness and sympathy shown me in my late bereavement, also for the heartfelt floral gifts presented by many friends.

O. P. HOLDRIDGE.

Monson, April 18, 1894.

BASE BALL CAPTAIN WRITES.

John Morrill, Formerly Captain of the Bostons, Joins the Staff of the Boston Journal.

One of the most enterprising moves in newspaper writing of to-day is that just made by the Boston Journal. That paper has engaged Capt. John F. Morrill, so noted as Captain and Manager of the Boston Base Ball Club, to have charge of the review of the base ball games in the Journal, writing over his own signature every Sunday an interesting and entertaining article regarding the week's doings by the base ball players of the country. This notable move will illustrate the intention of the Journal to give its readers the best of everything in the base ball line the coming summer. No paper in the country will have as a contributor to its columns a man whose name can carry more weight than can Capt. Morrill's, and everyone will want to read Capt. Morrill's articles. Capt. Morrill's interesting articles will appear in the Journal exclusively.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

The Old and the New.

Changes take place in the medical profession as in all branches of science. We believe the greatest good will follow that generous offer made by Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who invites all persons, far and near, suffering from any form of disease, to write him a description of their complaints, and he will send them, free of charge, a complete explanation of their diseases, with advice how to be cured. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters and explains each symptom so carefully that you cannot fail to understand exactly what ails you.

Dr. Greene is our most successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. He is the discoverer of that famous medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, which is doing such a vast amount of good all over the world. He uses nothing in his practice but harmless vegetable remedies, which can in no manner injure you. This great system of giving consultation and advice through letter correspondence, free of charge, is especially important to the poor and those living at a distance from large cities, as such consultation and advice were formerly attended by great expense. The doctor is having wonderful success in treating the sick through letter correspondence, and if you will write him about your disease it will undoubtedly lead to your cure.

Can't be overlooked—the simple truth about Pearline. It washes clothes, paint, dishes—everything that can be washed. It cleans your house from cellar to attic. It saves you half the work, and most of the wear, and it injures nothing with which you use it. The facts about Pearline make its imitators mourn; she who has used it longest, knows best their truth.

Beware of imitations. 352 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

PIANOS

What We Do

Some families want a piano, but keep putting it off till they can pay the whole price cash down.

The result is that meanwhile they go without, or else waste money in renting, and then, perhaps, when the money is ready it is too late to enjoy or profit by the use of an instrument.

A small payment to begin with, and a little more than bare rent monthly will buy an Ivers & Pond Piano in the same time it would take to save up the money, and the investment is all the time safer than a savings bank, for the customer has the piano all the time.

An Ideal of Humble Life.

They may talk of their houses and horses,
The pictures that hang on the wall,
The fine sparklin' rings on their fingers,
The servants that come at their call,
The swish of their silks an' their satins,
Roast beef an' plum pudding each day,—
Faith! I envy no woman her riches,
When Dennis comes home to his tay!

It's true, when he goes in the morning,
With the children to dress and to comb
For the school, an' the place to make decent
In the four little rooms here at home—
With scrubbing an' mending an' making,
An' dinner to get by the way,
There isn't much time to be idle
Till Dennis comes home to his tay.

But then we're as neat an' as tidy
As if we had money galore;
The stove like a cat's eye is shining,—
You could eat your three meals on the floor;
The bit of a plant in the window
Is as fresh as a morning in May;
An' the children go wild with their nonsense,
When Dennis comes home to his tay.

The kettle is singing a welcome,
There's a good bit of beef in the pot,
The table-cloth's clean—for I wash it,—
The dish of potatoes is hot,
We're healthy, an' happy, an' hearty,—
So thank God for his mercies I say,
For it's we that have cause to be thankful,
When Dennis comes home to his tay.

For then with his pipe in the corner
He can sit down as well as the best,
With his bit of man's gossip to give me,
While I have my minute to rest
An' to tell him the news of the neighbors,
While the children go on with their play,
O, I envy no woman her riches,
When Dennis comes home to his tay.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

PLUMPNESS vs. EMACIATION.

What Makes the Difference?

It is a question of Food and its Digestion.

Many people think we must eat fats and oils to become fleshy. This is a serious mistake. We should eat starch foods. If we cannot digest well cooked starch foods use Pre-Digested Starch Food—PASKOLA. Paskola will not only be absorbed at once by the most delicate stomach, but it will create an appetite for other food. An increase in flesh and strength will follow its use.

Mr. C. H. Butler, a druggist of Oswego, N. Y., says: "A young lady just in reports a gain of five pounds after the use of two small bott'es of "Paskola."

THE RIGHT KIND.

The merchant had arrived at his office as early as 7 o'clock, and five minutes after he got down to his desk a foxy-looking, bright-faced boy came in. The merchant was reading, and the boy, with his hat off, stood there expectantly, but saying nothing. At the end of two minutes he coughed slightly and spoke.

"Excuse me, sir," he said, "but I'm in a hurry."

The merchant looked up.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"I want a job, if you've got one for me."

"Oh, do you?" snorted the merchant. "Well, what are you in such a hurry about?"

"I've got to be, that's why," was the sharp response. "I left school yesterday evening to go to work, and I haven't got a place yet, and I can't afford to be wasting time. If you can't do anything for me, say so and I'll skip. The only place where I can stop long in is the place where they pay me for it."

The merchant looked at the clock.

"When can you come?" he asked.

"I don't have to come," replied the youngster; "I'm here now, and I'd been at work before this if you'd said so."

Half an hour later he was at it, and he's likely to have a job as long as he wants it.—Detroit Free Press.

AN UNLUCKY THIRTEEN AT TABLE.

"Ever sit down at a table where there were just thirteen?" asked the man in the shaggy ulster.

"Once," replied the man with the white spot in his moustache.

"Well, you never observed that any bad luck followed it, did you?"

"Why—haw—yes. Bad luck for most of the thirteen."

"Any of them die?"

"Not that I know of. Never heard of any of them dying."

"Not enough victuals to go around?" queried the man with the snub nose.

"Who's talking about victuals? There wasn't any victuals."

"I though you said you sat down to a table where there were thirteen persons.

"That's what I said. The table was in a lawyer's office. It was at a meeting of creditors. There were twelve of them. I was the other man."

There was a long pause, and then the man with the baggy trousers inquired:—

"In what way did the meeting prove unlucky, if I may ask."

"None of 'em ever got a blamed cent out of me," answered the man with the white spot in his moustache, heaving a deep sigh.—Chicago Tribune.

A GREAT INVENTION.

"I have here," began the energetic man as he bundled into the young lawyer's office "the greatest invention of the age."

It was cases that the lawyer wanted, not inventions, and he said something rather rude; but the energetic man proved to be a philosopher, and merely smiled.

"I call it," pursued the visitor, "The Eternal Kisser, because there is simply no end to the kisses it bestows. It is this." He hauled out a spray of mistletoe covered with white berries. This interested the young lawyer, who raised his eyebrows inquiringly.

"Mistletoe, proclaimed the agent, "is very scarce this year, and a bunch containing a score of berries would bankrupt a poor man. Now this great invention brings happiness within reach of all. Tradition permits you a kiss for each and every berry, you know. You hold this spray above your beloved's head—so. You bend—so—and kiss her. Then you grab a berry—so—and pull it—presto, it flies back again in place. The leaves and berries are india-rubber, sir, and — Two, did you say? Fifty cents. Thank you, sir. Good day."—Harper's Magazine.

HISTORIC NOTRE DAME.

Notre Dame, the central and the mother church of Paris, the type in which the differing details of all the others were bound up and brought into harmony, rose swiftly into being, and grew to full perfection almost without the marring of a single line in the, first plan. Like a poem smitten into stone, it resumed the life that had produced it; for, as in the mirror of the Homeric story, or of the Nibelungenlied, is seen a whole civilization gathered up in song, so in Notre Dame the story of France in the twelfth century is written on an everlasting page, which Victor Hugo has read for this century and those to come. It is almost the last of that story in stone which began before the pyramids and seems ended with the great Gothic churches, with which well-nigh ceased the art of architecture itself.—Scribner's Magazine.

MOURNING STAMPS SUGGESTED.—Assistant Postmaster James Gayler has many callers daily, among them some persons with queer missions. A man who bore in his hand a letter in an envelope of mourning inquired for Mr. Gaylor recently. He wanted to know:

"Isn't there any way I can get mourning stamps?"

"Mourning stamps? I never heard of any," said Mr. Gaylar in some astonishment.

"I should think the government would print some. It is dreadful to put a big, staring Columbian stamp, or even an ordinary one of the glarish red color, on a letter of mourning. The stamp simply destroys all the effect of the black border. There ought to be a mourning stamp to harmonize with the envelope."

Mr. Gayler promised to lay the request before the department at Washington.—New York Tribune.

HEREDITARY.—An angry frown darkened the brow of the young creature with a wealth of golden brown hair and a dimple in each cheek.

With a petulant gesture she repelled the large old gentleman with the rheumatism.

"But," he protested, in his pain, "you said you would be very happy as my wife."

Her lip curled in scorn. She clutched the fringe of her robe, and her face flamed.

"Sir"—

She turned away as she spoke.

—"that was before I knew. Oh, why"—

Her voice was a wail.

—"didn't you tell me your father lived to be 108 years old?"

She wept hysterically, and threatened to go right home to her mother.—Detroit Tribune.

KEEP TO THE RIGHT AND GO AHEAD.—The story is told that, on a certain occasion, when a company of persons were discussing in a crowded room sacred subjects and certain prominent men, one suddenly exclaimed: "I should like to meet the bishop of Litchfield; I'd put a question to him that would puzzle him."

"Very well," said a voice out of another corner, "now is your time, for I am the bishop."

The man was somewhat startled and taken aback, but presently recovered himself and said: "Well, my lord, can you tell me the way to heaven?"

"Nothing easier," answered the bishop, "you have only to turn to the right and go ahead."—The Independent.

The real conversations reporter had been sent to interview Adam.

"What, in your opinion," he said, "is the cause of your misfortune?"

"I attribute it mainly," said Adam, "to a lack of the institutions which accompany an advanced state of civilization."

"Would you mind explaining yourself more fully?"

"Certainly not. If the fruit crop had only been a failure this year we would have had no trouble whatever."—Washington Star.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

REGULATIONS OF THE
Board of Health of Palmer.

PREVENTION OF DISEASE.

1. No privy vault or reservoir, unless made water-tight, shall be established within two rods of any well, spring, or other source of water supply used for culinary or domestic purposes.
2. All vaults or other depositories for night soil are required to be cleaned at least twice each year, in the spring, on or before May 15th, and in the fall, on or before Nov. 15th, and disinfectants are to be used freely during the summer months.
(All town officers are reminded that the duty of carrying out the provisions of this article, so far as it relates to school houses and other public buildings, belongs to them.)
3. Parties removing night soil from any premises are required to cover their loads with dry earth, or make use of water-tight casks, with well-fitted covers, before conveying it through any street, and all such refuse matter wherever deposited must be well covered with earth or other material.

DRAINS, CESS POOLS, ETC.

4. Owners of houses and tenements, or occupants of the same are required to clean all drains and cess-pools for house slops on or before May 15th in each year, and to use disinfectants in them frequently during the summer. Also to remove the filth from such drains.
5. No open drains for the passage of house slops or other deleterious matter will in any case be allowed to discharge upon the surface of the ground, or into the gutters of the public streets or highways.
6. No horse offal, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon any street, court, lane or alley, public square or vacant lot, or into any highway, and no butcher, fish monger or vender of merchandise shall leave any refuse upon any of the places aforesaid.

DISEASED ANIMALS.

7. No animals having any infectious or contagious disease shall be brought within the limits of the town. No diseased animal or its flesh shall be sold or offered for sale, and no decayed or diseased meat, fish, vegetables, fruit or other articles of food shall be sold or offered for sale. No person shall sell or offer for sale adulterated milk, or milk produced by animals diseased, or improperly fed, or butter from the same.
8. No person shall throw any dead animal or fowl into any reservoir, pond or stream, or cause any animal to be drowned in said waters.

VACCINATION.

9. Every child must be vaccinated before reaching the age of two years, and all persons, if exposed to the contagion of small pox, must be vaccinated when small pox is known to exist near them or they are exposed to it. And all persons above two years who have never been vaccinated must be immediately.
(The Board would call attention to sec. 51 to 55 chap. 80 of the Public Statues.)
10. Every householder in whose dwelling small pox, diphtheria or scarlet fever shall at any time occur shall immediately notify the Board of the same, and until instructions are received from the Board shall not permit any clothing or other property that may have been exposed to infection to be removed from the house; nor shall any occupant take up his residence elsewhere without consent of the Board.
And any person so afflicted must be isolated from all those liable to contract or communicate the disease, and none but nurses or physicians shall be allowed access to persons sick with any such disease.
11. No person or article liable to propagate a dangerous disease shall be brought within the limits of the town without special consent and under the direction of the Board.
12. Each member of the Board of Health shall act as health officer, and may order the abatement or removal of any nuisance coming under his observation. If any owner or occupant of premises upon which the abatement or removal of a nuisance, source of filth or cause of sickness has been ordered shall neglect to comply with such order, the same may be abated or removed by the Board at the expense of such owner or occupant.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Owners and occupants of houses and tenements are alike responsible for a full compliance with these regulations.
The Board earnestly ask the co-operation of every citizen in securing the desirable sanitary condition to promote which the foregoing regulations are framed.
Persons having knowledge of any violation of these regulations are requested to inform the Board of Health, which should be done by a written communication addressed to the Secretary of the Board, defining distinctly the character of the violation, its location and the name of the offending party.

NEW ENGLAND COXEYITES.

Expect to Start To-morrow, leaving Faneuil Hall, Boston at 12 o'clock, Noon.

The New England Industrial Army, followers of Coxey, was given a big boom at Boston Tuesday night, and it looks now as if the start for Washington will surely be made. All the leaders were on hand and there was great enthusiasm among them. The whole evening was given up to making plans for the march.

Superintendent Swift, for the executive committee, reported progress. If enough money could be secured, the committee favored the hiring of a box car, which could be shunted to sidings along the route to permit of the making of speeches. Advices from Fall River had been received, showing that great enthusiasm was being manifested there. The Fall River Herald was especially anxious that the army should pass through that city, and guaranteed a hearty reception.

The speaker was of the opinion that Harvard and Yale students would furnish financial and moral support, if properly approached. They were full of fun and ought to be catered to. A committee consisting of Superintendent Swift, Mr. Casson, Mr. Amsden and Miss Merrill was appointed to write letters to the Harvard and Yale students.

Major General Fitzgerald thought it would be better to walk to Washington. He favored the following route: Boston to Fall River, New London, New Haven, Bridgeport, New York, Jersey City, Newark, Elizabeth, New Brunswick, Trenton, Bristol, Philadelphia, Chester, Wilmington, Havre de Grace, Baltimore, Washington. It was voted that all recruits report at the Equity Union in Boston to-morrow and that the start be made at 12 o'clock noon. From the Equity Union the recruits will proceed to Faneuil hall, from which the formal start will be made.

DEATH OF SENATOR VANCE,

Who Had Not Been Well Since the Assembling of Congress.

Senator Zebulon Baird Vance of North Carolina died of apoplexy at Washington at 10.45 o'clock Saturday night. Mr. Vance was born in Buncomb county, N. C., in 1830, and was educated at Washington college, Tennessee, and at the University of North Carolina. He was admitted to the bar in 1852, and settled at Asheville, from which place he was elected to the Legislature in 1854. In 1858 he was sent to Congress to fill an unexpired term, and was re-elected in 1859. When the troubles of 1860 began Vance strongly opposed secession, and did what he could to keep his state in the Union. When his state seceded he went with it and at once raised a company and was made captain in the Twenty-sixth North Carolina regiment. He served in the army until 1862, when he was elected governer of North Carolina, he being at the time in the trenches at Petersburg.

In 1864 he was re-elected, but was removed by the Federal authorities in 1865, and for a while was imprisoned in the carrol prison at Washington. In 1868 he was again nominated for governor, but could not serve because of his political disability. In 1870 he was elected to the United States senate, but was not admitted to his seat because his disabilities had not been removed. In 1876 he was free of these obstacles to public office, and was elected governor by a large majority, although North Carolina had been a Republican state. In 1880 he was again elected to the United States senate, and his term would have expired in 1895, but it was doubtful if he would have been a candidate for re-election, so poor had his health been for some months.

SUPPOSED LENOX BURGLARS CAUGHT.

One of Them Known to the People as the "Gentleman Burglar."

Michael Sherlock and Christopher Madden of New York were arrested in that city late Sunday night. The men are said to be members of a gang that have been committing the numerous burglaries reported recently from Lenox, Stockbridge and other towns of Massachusetts. Sherlock is a tall, broad-shouldered man, weighing about 225 pounds, and has been identified as the famous Stockbridge robber, about whom a lengthy story appeared in the newspapers last fall. He was given the sobriquet of "the man with the musical voice" by the different women of Stockbridge who were aroused from slumbers by his polite request to make no noise but to kindly give him what jewelry they had convenient. A number of women were obliged under his seductive tones of demand to strip their fingers and ears of their diamond ornaments, and in return they were left unharmed by the gentlemanly robber, who bid them a pleasant farewell before departing with their jewelry. Some of the women who met him on these occasions declared that he was positively fascinating, and that his voice was as modulated and as tender as the most sympathetic friend.

$225,000 FIRE AT SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

Twenty-four buildings in the heart of Santa Cruz, Cal., were reduced to ashes in a fire that raged from 10.30 o'clock Saturday night until early Sunday morning. Only the prompt arrival of assistance from San Jose and Watsonville prevented the destruction of the entire business part of the town. The loss is $225,000, and insurance $100,000. Among the buildings consumed are Schafer's furniture store, Hoffman's real estate office, McKinney & Son's real estate office, Louvre's saloon, Leinhard's block, the city bank and law office, the Hoyling block, court-house and Werner building. The fire was of incendiary origin.

BISHOP SOUTHGATE BURIED.

The funeral of Right Rev. Horatio Southgate, formerly bishop of Smyrna and rector of Zion church, New York, took place Monday at the church of the Redeemer, Astoria, L. I., four bishops of the church and nearly fifty of the clergy assisting. The church was crowded, and Bishop Potter of the diocese of New York, Bishop Littlejohn of Long Island, Bishop Coleman of Delaware and Bishop Courtney of Nova Scotia occupied seats in the chancel.

DANGEROUS ANARCHIST ARRESTED IN LONDON.

Francis Palti, an anarchist, was arrested in London Sunday evening while carrying a bomb on the streets. In his lodgings were found anarchist literature and liquids such as sulphuric acid and liquid potash. Among the books found in his possession was a treatise upon dynamite, written by Alfred Nobel, the Swede, who first attempted the application of nitro glycerine as an explosive agent.

Small pox has broken out anew at the Sing, Sing, N. Y., state prison. New cases have recently developed, all among the men working in the rag industry. The men who were first taken with the disease have recovered.

A cyclone in Oklahoma Tuesday morning destroyed 15 houses, killed two people, injured three or four and did a great amount of other damage.

DAVID DUDLEY FIELD BURIED.

A Large Number of Relatives and Friends Present.

The body of David Dudley Field was brought from New York to Stockbridge for burial in a special car Monday. The burial took place in the beautiful Stockbridge cemetery, in the presence of several of his relatives and many of his loving friends, including many of the older residents of Stockbridge, Lenox and the surrounding towns. As the funeral procession slowly passed from the railroad station to the cemetery the chime of bells in the tower on Main street, which were presented to Stockbridge by Mr. Field in memory of his grandchildren, rang out familiar hymns which had been the great lawyer's favorites, and gave him great solace last summer and autumn when he was in Stockbridge. It was the custom to ring them at sundown. As the casket was lowered into the graves the chimes, which were not 30 rods away, rang out "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and as the first shovelful of earth was placed upon all that was mortal of the great jurist, the chimes changed to another of Mr. Field's favorite hymn, "There's a land that is fairer than day." It was a most impressive scene as the relatives and great nun ber of friends stood silently about the grave. The day was bright and warm.

SUSPICIOUS DEATH.

Intense excitement prevails in the town of Salem, N. H., over a death which occured last Saturday under peculiar circumstances. Mrs. Jane Booth has resided alone for several years until within the past month, and recently received $2000 or $3000 by the death of a relative. About a month ago it is alleged she prevailed upon Samuel J. Averill and his wife to come to her place to take care of her, promising as a recompense, they say, to make them the heirs to the balance of her property, only stipulating that she should have decent care and burial. They accepted and since then had been living there. Mrs. Booth had been in somewhat feeble health, but did not take to her bed until two weeks ago. The Averills did not deem it necessary to call a physician, and no doctor was summoned until last Wednesday, when Dr. Pierce of Methuen was called in. He says at that time she was suffering from a bilious attack of nervousness, for which he prescribed and went away. From that time up to the hour of her death no other person except the Averills had seen her. The selectmen have assumed charge of affairs. Drs. Wade and Presby performed an autopsy. They found that the woman had been suffering from heart trouble, which may have caused death. The result of this explanation, however, does not allay the suspicion of the authorities, and it is probable that the stomach will be removed and sent to Boston for a chemical analysis of its contents.

TYPHOID FEVER EPIDEMIC.

The town of Windsor, Vt., is experiencing a typhoid fever epidemic which shows no signs of abating. There are 130 cases and 8 deaths have already occurred. The first case was in January, on a farm at the head of the water supply. Three weeks afterward the first case broke out in the village, and in a few days nearly half the houses in the village contained one or more patients. The water commissioners have been untiring in their efforts to clear and purify the water, and it is thought that there will be no new cases. The Massachusetts state board of health sent Dr. Hamilton there last week to investigate the matter, and he agreed with the local authorities in the cause of the trouble. In the meantime the village is supplied with spring water by means of watering carts.

Guy George, a member of the class of '91 of Dartmouth College, died at the Mary Hitchcock hospital at Hanover, N. H., of typhoid fever Monday night. He contracted the disease at Windsor, where he was principal of the high school.

VALUABLE HORSES BURNED.

Fire was discovered in the large barn on the estate of L. B. Williams on South street, Northampton, about 2 o'clock Sunday morning. The barn was entirely destroyed, and with it two valued horses, a new buggy, three tons of hay, several sets of harness, blankets and robes, garden tools and a quantity of feed. The total loss is computed to be about $5000, insured for about $2000. Mr. Williams paid $2000 three or four months ago for the horses, but placed their loss at $750. While unable to discover any cause for the fire, Mr. Williams was loath to ascribe it to incendiaries. There had been a fire early the day before in the stove in the annex, but the coachman, who was in the annex between 5 and 6 o'clock Saturday evening, declares there was no fire in the stove then, so he dumped some rubbish in it.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

A serious railroad accident occurred at Silver Brook, near Hazelton, Pa., Sunday noon, killing one man and injuring many others, caused by a Pennsylvania railroad freight train running into a Lehigh Valley express. The accident was due to an oversight of the Pennsylvania freight crew, and the wreck is one of the most serious that has ever happened on the Deleno division of the Lehigh Valley. There being but few trains running on Sunday, the freight had a clear track and was making fast time, and the engineer said he did not see the passenger train until it was too late. A moment later both engines came together with a crash, driving the forward car into the tender of the Valley engine and demolishing it. There were nearly a hundred passengers on the express train, who were thrown violently about in all directions.

RAILROAD STRIKE IN THE WEST.

The American railway union appears to have inaugurated on the Great Northern and Montana Central railways the most complete strike ever known in the West. From Minot, Dak., to the Pacific not a wheel is turning. Chiefs of the various railway federations have wired branch lodges at Spokane, warning the men from joining the strike at their peril, as it is illegal. The engineers and firemen have refused to obey the orders of the train chiefs and are with the strikers. The Northern Pacific employes held a large meeting at Sprague Saturday night, and voted to offer the Great Northern employes 25 per cent of their salary to aid the strikers.

The prompt response of the fire department probably saved the large sash, blind and door shop of A. F. Tyler at Athol from being a total loss by fire Wednesday evening. Fire broke out about 7.30 in the evening. Three alarms were given, and the whole department was so promptly on hand that the blaze was subdued before it reached the office and glazing building. Had the department been five minutes later nothing could have saved the whole shop. The damage was largely by water, and will probably not exceed $5000. It is supposed that a hot-box caused the fire.

A Peabody man, aged 60 years, mistook a bottle of horse medicine for whisky Tuesday night and drank a large quantity of it. He died in a few hours.

NEW QUORUM RULE.

House Adopts the Measure by a Vote of More than Four to One.

There was a very large attendance on both sides of the House of Representatives at Washington Monday in anticipation of the fight over the adoption of the new quorum counting rule, and the galleries were unusually well filled. The Republicans at first contemplated offering a substitute, but were so well pleased with the rule presented by the Democratic majority of the committee on rules that they finally withdrew the substitute, and plumped a solid vote for the new rule, which was carried by a vote of 212 for to 47 against. The new rule adopted is as follows, which is practically the same as ex-Speaker Reed's:

Amend rule 15 by inserting between clauses one and two the following as clause two, and change the number of clause two to clause three:

Upon every roll call and before the beginning thereof the speaker shall name two members, one from each side of the pending question, if practicable, who shall take their places at the clerk's desk to tell the names of at least enough members who are in the hall of the house during the roll call who do not respond, when added to those responding to make a quorum. If a quorum does not respond on the roll call, then the names of those so noted as present shall be reported to the speaker, who shall cause the list to be called from the clerk's desk and recorded in the journal, and in determining the presence of a quorum to do business, those who voted, those who answered present and those so reported present shall be considered. Members noted may, when their names are called, record their votes notwithstanding the provisions of clause one of this rule.

Amend clause one of rule 8 by adding to the following words, "and on a roll call should he not vote, he shall answer present," so as to read "every member shall be present within the hall of the house during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented, and shall vote on each question put unless he has direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question, and on roll call should he not vote, he shall answer present."

WALTHAM M. E. CONFERENCE.

Resolutions on the Attitude of Romanism Regarding Public Schools.

At the Waltham M. E. conference, just ended, the committee on Romanism made a severe attack on that body and adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That to all Roman Catholics who are in sympathy with our free institutions, we extend a most cordial greeting and assure them that on the ground of true loyalty to our government and its institutions, we stand with them as brothers.

That we see cause for alarm in the often repeated attempts of the Roman Catholic priesthood to make our public schools sectarian.

That these attempts demand the united action of all lovers of American institutions in bold, uncompromising resistance of all attacks on our public schools from whatever source they may come.

That as "faith without works is dead, being alone," the members of the New England conference will by voice, pen and ballot, in private and public, in press, pulpit and on the platform utter no uncertain sound on the subject of these aggressions, but we will "cry aloud and spare not."

That we believe it to be essential to American citizenship that every qualified voter should hold its allegiance to the United States; that he should disclaim the right of any foreign potentate, political or ecclesiastical, to demand obedience to any authority which shall cause him to violate his oath of obligations as a good citizen.

That we gladly recognize the awakening of the people to the nature of the perils that threaten us, and we bid Godspeed to all well-directed efforts to check this and all other political movements (be they secret or open) that involve the safety of our land.

That we favor such state and national legislation as shall forever forbid the appropriation of public moneys for sectarian purposes.

APPEAL FROM WOMAN SUFFRAGISTS.

They Ask for Money for Campaigning in Kansas and New York.

The National American Woman's Suffrage Association has issued the following appeal to "friends of equal suffrage," which is signed by Susan B. Anthony, president, and Ellen Battelle Dietrick, corresponding secretary:

During the coming year two states, Kansas and New York, propose to amend their constitutions. The one national organization in our country which to-day stands for true and full self-government, the National American woman suffrage association, calls upon all honest citizens to help in the task of educating the people of these states to render justice to women in their constitution amending. Every city, town and village in both states must hear the question presented by able speakers; millions of printed arguments must be circulated, that the people may be able to decide intelligently and without prejudice when this great question of right or wrong, of justice or injustice, is set before them at the polls. Money is urgently needed for this mission of educating the people into the principal of a true republic. But remember the enormous results obtained by small contribution, from millions. This appeal is to you. What will you do about it? Send in your contribution, whether small or large, to help in establishing the form of government promised by the founders of our republic. Send all money direct to the treasurer of the National American woman suffrage association, Mrs. Harriet Taylor, Warren, O. Acknowledgment of all sums received will be made through the suffrage papers.

BANGOR HOTEL BURNED.

Guests Jumped from Windows and Many were Injured.

Fire was discovered in the basement of the Merchant's Hotel at Bangor, Me., at 1.30 Wednesday morning, and the flames went up through the four stories to the roof very quickly. When the fire department arrived the dozens of windows were filled with the pale faces of the many guests who had been unable to escape by the way of the halls and stairs. Before the firemen could raise ladders many of the affrighted men and women jumped, some on the hard sidewalk in front, and some among a pile of boxes and cases in the rear. Several daring rescues were made by the police and the firemen. A screaming woman in the second story terrified more spectators by climbing on the sill and preparing to jump. A police officer saw her danger, and went into the burning building, crawling through the corridors on his hands and knees through the smoke. He managed to reach the terrified woman in time to keep her from throwing herself out of the window and dragging her along the floor got her to the open air.

THE STARS AND STRIPES GOOD ENOUGH.

Edwin S. Stewart, mayor of Philadelphia, Monday declined to permit the universal peace union to float its flag over Independence hall in place of the stars and stripes Wednesday, when it held a celebration in the historic building to commemorate the signing of the arbitration treaty at Washington on April 18, 1890. Mayor Stuart said: "I have always refused to allow any flag other than the American flag to be raised over Independence hall, and must decline to grant your request. No flag excepting our national ensign has ever been permitted to fly over that building, and I feel that you and your union, upon reflection, can but agree with me that under no circumstances whatever should the American flag, which floats there throughout the entire year, be permitted to be hauled down to be replaced by any other, no matter what that other may be or represent."

A number of workmen at Salt Lake City held a meeting there Tuesday night and decided to raise an Industrial army to go to Washington. About 200 enlistments were made. A labor meeting is to be held to-morrow night, at which they say they will get 1000 recruits.

BOSTON'S NEW TREMONT HOTEL.

It is stated in Boston on the authority of R. A. Stranahan, lessee of the Tremont House, one of Boston's oldest and most famous hotels, that plans have been perfected for tearing down the old hostelry and replacing it with one of the finest hotels in America. The erection of such a hotel has been quietly discussed for some time, and was planned by the late Frederick Ames, owner of the Tremont House. A meeting of those interested was held recently, and as a result plans have been drawn by New York parties for a magnificent structure, eleven stories in height, with a summer garden on the roof. The first three stories will be of conglomerate sandstone. The rest will be of pressed buff brick. The building will be fire proof and the decorations will be of the most elaborate character. The estimated cost of the building is over $2,500,000.

A CLERGYMAN'S TROUBLES.

Rev. A. J. Wheeler, of Concord, N. H., a member of the Law and Order League, who has been active in recent liquor prosecutions, has been arrested on civil process by an agent of Golding & Co, of Boston. It appears that some years ago Mr. Wheeler established in Concord the Wheeler Publishing Company and bought his presses of Golding & Co. on the installment plan. An investigation disclosed that he had borrowed money of two parties to the amount of $1600, and for security had given two mortgages upon the property bought of Golding & Co., which under the terms of the installment agreement was not his to dispose of or mortgage. Mr. Wheeles has secured guarantors, who indorced the writ of trover served upon him and bound themselves for his appearance at the next term of the supreme court. He was accordingly released from custody.

WANTED BLOOD.

A mob of excited citizens walked the streets of Meridian, Miss., for several hours Monday and clamored for the lives of Robert Belk and Dudley Scott, firebugs, who were captured by the police just after they had applied the torch to the West End Public school building. A mob quickly gathered, and it was with difficulty that the officers prevented their prisoners from being lynched on the spot. Belk and Scott were hurried to the county jail. The news of the arrest spread through the city, and for several hours the streets were filled with citizens bent on inflicting summary punishment, as incendiary fires have come too frequent recently. The officers and cooler heads appealed to the mob to let the law take its course, promising them that justice would be done. Under the laws of Mississippi arson is punishable by death.

MRS. SARTORIS'S PLANS.

It is said that Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris, daughter of Gen. Grant, who has been sojourning at Washington, D. C., has finally decided to make that city her permanent home. During her married life and since the death of her husband she has lived in England and her eldest son, Algernon, is still there, a student at Oxford, where he will remain until his graduation. Mrs. Sartoris has an income from the property left her by her father-in-law of $30,000 yearly. The widow of General Grant, who is now in San Diego, Cal., is expected soon to arrive east, and will, in all probability, also make her home at the capital.

SHORT NEWS NOTES.

One man was killed and another severely injured at Newmarket, N. H., Saturday night by a burglar to whom they gave chase and were endeavoring to capture.

It is stated that an attempt was to have been made upon the wife of Emperor William of Germany during his stay at Venice, and that the attempt was only frustrated by the vigilance of the police.

A German shoemaker of Williamsburg, N. Y., is dying from wounds he inflicted upon himself with an ax, in a desperate attempt to commit suicide. He has been out of work for nearly three months and his wife and three children literally starving, according to the man's story.

A few prominent ex-members of the Knights of Labor are planning to consolidate all the leading labor organizations, and the American federation of labor is said to be particularly interested in the movement. A conference will be held at Philadelphia next week Saturday to consider the movement.

Col. John H. Grover, the defeated People's Party candidate for mayor of Cincinnati, has addressed a letter to the editors of the local papers announcing that he would soon leave for Washington with 5000 unemployed to demand work or rations. He declares he will not march the men, but will go by train, which he figures will cost $10,000.

The Genesee valley in New York is flooded for miles with water from the heavy snow embankments melting on the southern hills. The damage to winter wheat on the low lands will be great. Fences, hay, stock and everything movable were swept away. Alarming reports have been received from farmers down the valley and the largest flood for years is anticipated.

The 75th anniversary of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society was celebrated at New York Monday in the historic Forsyth street church, the cradle of the society. Bishop Andrews presided, and many prominent Methodist clergymen and laymen were present. The fact that the receipts for 1893 amounted to $1,231,649 as against $823 in 1820, was adduced as an illustration of the phenomenal growth of the society.

The Cambria iron company at Connellsville, Pa., attempted to start up their Wheeler (Pa.) works Monday morning, but the men were driven off the yards by the women. The victorious females now declare they will guard the works night and day. The men at the Wheeler and Morrell works met Sunday and decided to continue the strike. All the men at the Mahoning and Atlas works of the Cambria iron company have accepted the new scale and gone to work.

Rear Admiral John Irwin was placed on the retired list Monday by the operation of law on reaching the age of 62 years. He hauled down his flag on the Philadelphia at Honolulu as Admiral Benham did on the San Francisco at Curacoa five days ago. It is an odd coincidence that both these admirals, after 47 years' service in the navy, both having been appointed in 1847, should retire aboard ship in foreign waters without turning their commands over to ranking successor, and should both be brought home as passengers in merchant vessels.

It is estimated that 200,000 miners will go out on a strike to-morrow by direction of the United Mine Workers of America, whose headquarters are at Columbus, O. Circulars have been sent to all local unions, in which the miners are told that "it is now or never that the power of action on their part must do its work. The interests of home, family and organization; the interests of the coal trade and the prosperity of mining communities demand that they do their duty regardless of local and individual interests." They are told not to be deluded by newspaper reports, nor mere rumors, but to apply to headquarters for information.

Alone.

Alone when the day is dawning,
Alone when the night dews fall;
Under the veil at the bridal,
Under the gloom of the pall,
Behind impenetrable barriers
To work out its life of dole,
From its first faint cry till the hour to die
Is the doom of each mortal soul.

First tender thought of the mother
Who brings us forth in pain,
As she looks in the eyes of her offspring
Some clew to its soul to gain,
"Of what is my baby thinking,
With that gaze intent and wise?"
But ever remains the mystery,
And never a voice replies.

Alone is the child in his sorrow
Over the broken toy;
Alone is the stricken lover,
Mourning a vanished joy.
Alone is the bride at the altar,
Alone the bridegroom stands,
With his hidden life between them,
That—and their plighted hands.

Alone lies the wife, with the canker
Of blighted hope in her heart;
Alone is the husband dreaming,
Of balked ambition's smart;
And so from the birth to the burial,
From the first to the latest breath;
In crowded streets, on lonely steeps,
The soul goes alone till death.

A HUMBLE MISSIONARY.

"You kin send your money to the heathen ef you want ter, but I kin find use fer what little I've got to spare right to home; and it's my opinion, Cynthy Pease, that it's just as much the Lord's work ter help one's neighbors as ter send the gospel to furrin parts."

The speaker was a tall, spare, plain-looking women of perhaps forty years of age; but there was a certain strength of character indicated in the flashing eyes which were bent on her morning caller, a woman of about her own age, who now spoke up rather testily:

"Well, Miss Hepsibah, mebbe the Lord didn't know his own business best when he commanded his servants ter preach the gospel in every nation, every clime—I say mebbe he didn't; but fur my part I don't dare go agin his express commands—see in' that I profess to be a follower of his. I think it's every Christian's dooty ter help spread the joyful tidin's ter the ends o' the earth."

The lips of the speaker almost clicked as then closed suddenly with a set, hard expression. She was plainer looking even than her companion; but principally because the general expression of her countenance was unsympathetic, and totally lacking in evidence of a loving, or even a kindly disposition.

"All Christians can't see their dooty through the same eyes," said Hepsibah, the color rising to her faded cheek. "Some of 'em choose ter spread a table with food fur the Lord's poor—it's more fidin' than tidin's however joyful."

"Massy on us! How can you speak so sacrilegious!" exclaimed Miss Pease, aghast. "Ain't religion the first and foremost thing for a mortal's good?"

"I don't know about that," replied Hepsibah. "We ain't none of us angels yet, an' while we have a mortal body, we've got ter give it somethin' to keep it a goin'. You can't do much fur a man's soul when his stomach's empty. The Lord made us that way, 'an we can't help ourselves. Religion's all right, 'an we all need it—a mighty sight more'n enny of us hev got"—whereat Miss Pease winced, and flushed to the roots of her fast fading hair combed straight back on her temples—"but none of us grow very fat on religion alone, I'm a thinkin', an' you can't reform a man with advice an' trac's when his body is suffering fur food ter keep the breath o' life in him."

"I am the breath of life," said Miss Pease, solemnly, with a long drawn out countenance. 'An' it is this bread which we are manded ter give ter the heathern."

"That may be," quickly replied Hepsibah, "but it's bread, too—the real stuff—that we are commanded ter give ter the poor, which as the Lord says, we have always with us."

'Man shall not live by bread alone,' quoted Miss Pease.

"Wall, we don't, most of," interrupted Hepsibah. "Most folks don't want to; they want it well buttered, and plenty of sweet sauce ter help it down. An' there ain't such a great sight of difference in folks, neither. I don't care how pious they may be, they all want their innards pretty comfortable—no use ter deny it—they pray better on a good square meal; that is, ef they don't hev dyspepsy. I've seen dyspepsy take the piety all out o' some orful pious folks?"

Hepsibah paused and smoothed out the faded black ties of the old fashioned bonnet which she held in her hand. Miss Pease rose from her chair.

"Then you won't give a cent to help the Lord's cause in Indy an' Afriey?" she said, looking grimly at Hepsibah.

"No, I won't!" said the latter, rising also. "I'm going to do the little I can ter help the Lord's cause at home. I was just agoing out to see that family which has moved into the Howard shanty under the hill, when you came. I hear they've been out, and hev seen nothin' but trouble since the husband died. 'There's a whole caboodle o' children, and nothin' to eat er wear. An' the mother sick, an' no one to do a thing for 'em. I'm goin' over ter see what I kin do; it won't be half as much as I'd like, fur I'm poor myself, an' a struggin' ter pay off my mortgage; but ef I can't give much money, there's other things I kin do, an' I'll do 'em, the Lord helpin' me. You've been a solicitin' me; now I'll solicit you, an' ask you to go along an' lend a hand.

Miss Pease hurriedly pinned her gray shawl, and exclaimed.

"I've got too much ter do, Miss King! I've staid here too long already, an' without no effect. I must be off adoin' of the Lord's work."

A moment later and she had departed; and Hepsibah, setting her teeth together hard, muttered between them:

"The Lord's work! I wonder how the Lord kin keep his hands off of some o' his professed workers?"

Hurriedly adjusting her bonnet, she went to the kitchen, and takin' a hamper from the table, already packed with good things, left the house and wended her way towards the little house under the hill before mentioned.

It was a lovely morning. Everything in nature seemed rejoicing. The outskirts of the little New England town where Hepsibah lived afforded abundant food for thought to the mind attuned to Nature's heart, and which rejoiced with her in beauty.

But Hepsibah's mind was preoccupied. She walked straight ahead, without a look to the right or left, evidently unconscious of all that was passing around her. And as she walked she communed with herself sometimes speaking her thoughts aloud; sometimes whispering.

"Cynthy Pease ain't no Christian. I wanted to tell her so, but I'm glad for once I kept my tongue still. There ain't a poor family round here that's enny the better off r her givin'. She never give a dollar ter nny of 'em that ever I heard of—an' if she had give it, she'd a told of it quick enough. In my opinion, she won't send enny to the heathen either; only by going round soliciting she makes a show of being generous. Givin' to missionary work is all right; but I b'lieve in seein' to our own poor first. As for them heathen in Indy and Afriey—they kin wait for religion better'n lots o' starvin' critters all about us kin wait fur food.'

Half muttering the last words to her self Hepsibah seemed to take in at a glance the surroundings of the poor family who had taken shelter in the little hut which she now approached; and with a determined but kindly look on her face she knocked upon the weather-beaten door.

Four or five children gathered from near and from far as the door was opened by a pale-faced woman holding a baby in her arms.

Hepsibah set down the basket with a sigh of relief (it was a heavy basket) before she spoke; and then she held out her hand, entering the door at the same time, and exclaimed:

"You don't know me, Mis' Harris, but I've heard you was sick an' in trouble, so I've come ter see yer. I hope I ain't intrudin'? I don't want ter do nothin' of the sort—but I'm jest sorry fur ye, an' thought I'd come ter tell yer so."

There was that in her eyes and in her manner which told as plainly as her words how sorry she was.

Poor Mrs. Harris was overcome. Illness and trouble had done much to weaken her nervous system, and to render her more susceptible to the influence of kind words and real sympathy. She burst into tears.

"There, there, don't cry!" exclaimed Hepsibah, greatly troubled. "I didn't mean ter make yer cry. I never know how to say anything—I allers take holt of things by the tail end, but I mean well."

"Yes, indeed, sobbed the poor woman, "and I thank you so much for your kind sympathy. I was feeling this morning as if God had forsaken me. We had eaten our last loaf of bread, and I felt so ill and so heart-broken because of my hungry children that I couldn't pray. It seemed as if God had hidden himself behind dark clouds, and would not hear me."

"Oh, don't feel that way," exclaimed Hepsibah. Dont! He does hear and he'll take care of you. However, I didn't come to preach. I ain't brought no tracts, but I have brought something ter eat, thank the Lord, and let's have it out of that basket this minute an' travelin' down them children's throats."

An hour later (and, oh, how much can happen in a single hour! the hungry fed; benumbed, sad hearts made glad and hopeful once more again; a new lease of life taken as another glimpse is had of God's unfailing mercy, all possible in one short hour) Hepsibah arose to depart, making promise of future aid.

"Let me know the name of my benefactor?" said Mrs. Harris, clasping the hand of Hepsibah with grateful pressure.

"Hepsibah King," was the reply. "Miss Hepsibah," she added, "I am nothing but an old maid."

A look of surprise had suddenly come over the countenance of Mrs. Harris, whereat Hepsibah exclaimed:

"Well, tain't my fault. I never had no offers, never but one, and he was a cousin—wouldn't a hed him no how. But what's the matter, Mis' Harris?"

"Hepsibah King, did you say?" gasped Mrs. Harris, sinking into a chair. "Was your cousin's name Samuel King, formerly of N——?"

"For the land sake alive! Do you know Samuel King, Mis' Harris? Yes, he is my cousin. Where is he?"

"He died out West in the very town in which we lived," Mrs. Harris replied.

"Sam King dead!" said Hepsibah. "Well-a-day! No use crying over spilt milk; if he's gone, he's gone, an' I can't call him back; but—I think I would a called him ef I could a-found out where he was. Young girls don't allers know their own minds, or hearts, an' didn't realize how much he was ter me till he had gone—I didn't know where. Then my folks moved and perhaps he didn't know where to find us—if he ever wanted to."

"Indeed he wanted to," interrupted Mrs. Harris," but he never succeeded. He and my husband were very good friends. He was unmarried, and though he supposed you had been married for many years, he said that you should be his heir if you could be found. He left his property by will to you, in my husband's trust. He died while we were there and soon after my husband lost his life, and so Mr. King's affairs had to be administered by others. You have been advertised for in the West largely, and in the East also. It is strange that they have not discovered you ere this."

"Wall, I never read no papers," said Hepsibah, "and the world might burn up and I shouldn't know nothing about it. But poor Sam dead! Well, it was good of him ter leave me his money. I don't deserve it—I orter married him. How much is there! Several hundred dollars? If there is, I kin raise my mortgage."

"Several hundred dollars!" echoed Mrs. Harris. He left forty thousand dollars and all for you."

"Lordy massy sakes alive!" gasped Hepsibah dropping to the very floor in overwhelming astonishment. "You don't mean it! You can't mean it. Forty thousand dollars! and all fur me—Hepsibah King, an old maid, too, without a chick or child or single relative! For the land sake, what shall I do with it all? I shall have ter send some to the heathen!"

"But dear me, Mis' Harris," she added, rising hastily as if struck by some sudden impulse, "You shall have a big share of it the fust thing when I get hold of it. If it hadn't been fur you I never should a heard of it. You shall have a home, and all the comforts money can buy. I guess I can find a use for it. There shan't be a hungry person in this town, or a naked one; not if I know it. I feel like shouting, I'm so happy. Don't you cry no more, or feel a bit worried. You see the Lord does hear. He does care, and we orter praise him forever for his goodness. I feel as if I could help the whole world—not forgetting them heathen over in Africy," she added, more to herself, as she started away from the shanty, bidding Mrs. Harris a fervent good-bye.

"It's a pity that them Africans can't know how good God is," she went on soliloquizing as she walked briskly homeward.

"I dunno but I shall turn missionary, and go and tell 'em. But that wouldn't work nohow—I don't know enough—I wouldn't be of no account at all in furrin' lands, and jest now I seem to be needed here.

"No—I'm no missionary, but if the Lord has a work for me to do(and I s'pose he has, for even the humblest of us), I dew believe that I shall find my Africy right here to home, where I kin do jest as much good with my money, according ter my way of thinking, as if I send it to the heathen."

"Black Tom" was before the court in the capacity of a witness in a chicken-stealing case, and the Judge had some doubts in his mind.

"Do you know the nature of an oath?" he asked.

"What's dat, boss?" inquired Tom, bending forward to catch the words.

"Do you know the nature of an oath?"

"Oh!" he exclaimed, his face brightening. "Deed I does, boss; ain't I been drivin' mules for gwine onter nine years!"—Detroit Free Press.

CHECK.—The man who tries to take advantage of the ignorance of another occasionally gets a Roland for his Oliver. A Boston man once, in England, seeing a laborer digging flints out of chalk, pompously asked him if he thought they grew.

"Sure," was the reply, "I know they do."

"Then put some flint on a table, and see how much it grows in a year."

"And you, sir," said the laberer, "put a potato on the table, and see how much it grows in a year."—Harper's Magazine.

Mr. Bennett is a bright and vigorous old gentleman; but to his little granddaughter Mabel, he seems very old indeed. She had been sitting on his knee and looking at him seriously for some moments one day, when she said, "Grandpa, were you in the ark?" "Why, no, my dear!" gasped her astonished grandparent. Mabel's eyes grew large and round with astonisament. "Then why weren't you drowned?" she asked.—Youth's Companion.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

It was in a crowded police court, in one of our great American cities, where the wheels of justice grind long, hard and steadily, and where the night's record of crime and poverty and wretchedness is given an airing in the police courts during the early hours of morning.

She was a little old woman, with a faded black bonnet and dress, and the worn faded shawl but poorly shielded her from the chill of the room. The bloom of youth had faded from her face, and grim lines of toil and worry furrowed her brow, upon which the mystic touch of time had fallen none too gently, as her whitened and disheveled locks could testify.

"Johnnie! Johnnie! Oh! my boy, my boy." I, and I alone, heard her cry between her sobs, as she stood leaning for support against the railing around the judge's bench, while the impatient ones of the crowd craned their necks to catch the first view of the morning's batch of prisoners. I reached her a chair and she sank into it, but it was only for a moment, for the prisoners, led by one blue-coated officer, and followed by several others, filed into the room just then, and she sprung forward to clasp her besotted, still half-drunken boy in her arms, only to be pushed roughly away by the frowning officer in the lead, whose heart—God forgive him—had long since become calloused to, and hardened by the cries of broken-hearted mothers. Scarcely a person noticed the wretched old mother in the black dress as she again sank into the chair. Men who visit police courts have seen such scenes before, and, I would hate to say as much of myself, their souls are no longer stirred by them.

The judge cared not how the man in the dock answered. The evidence was at hand to convict him and it was produced. There was no eloquent pleas, no man arouse in the accused one's defense, no rebuttal evidence was offered, in fact the prisoner said there was none to offer, and there was no one to say nay to the usual hurried proceedings of the police court. A felon was branded and a dear heart broken.

"You have been found guilty as charged, and I sentence you to ninety days in the work house," said the judge to the prisoner at the bar.

Then it was that the woman in mourning black staggered feebly to her feet.

"Guilty! guilty? your honor," she cried, her voice a dreary echo of her own broken heart. "My boy a thief? Oh, no, no; God grant that I have not heard you aright, your honor, and that these old ears of mine have deceived me—cruelly deceived me. What, you shake your head? Then it is so—so that my boy is to go to prison for theft. Oh! that I had never lived to see this; oh! that he had never been born. But it is a mistake, a terrible mistake, your honor. My boy, the boy whom I have loved and worked for all these years is no thief—he cannot be guilty, oh! no, no."

She paused; the tears were streaming unheeded down the wrinkled face, tears that would have moved the stoutest heart. It moved the prisoner and he turned to hide his emotion.

"Oh, my son, do not turn from me like that," she continued wildly, "look at me, look your old mother in the eyes and tell her that you are not guilty, that all her fond hopes, and all her toiling for you have not been in vain."

That was all. The prisoner could not look his mother in the face; he was guilty, and I caught the poor woman just in time to save her from falling to the floor. She whispered her boy's name once, and reached her arms out towards him. He sprang towards her, but he was too late; she was dead. She had died of a broken heart; and she had died with his name upon her lips. He went to prison, and she went to her grave. Had she lived she would have continued to toil for her boy, continued to slave for him, and to cling to him when all else had deserted him. Such is the heroism of a mother.—Mme. Diane Habile.

THE FUNERAL-SONG OF THE OMAHA INDIANS.

The funeral-song is sung at the obsequies of any man or woman who has been greatly respected in the tribe. Upon the death of such a one, men in the prime of early manhood meet together near the lodge of the deceased, divest themselves of all clothing but the breech-cloth, make two incisions in the left arm, and under the loop of flesh so made thrust a willow branch, having on it sprays of leaves. With the blood dripping upon the branches hanging from their arms and shoulder-blades, the men move silently in single file to the lodge where the dead lies; there, ranging themselves in a line shoulder to shoulder, and marking the rhythm of the tune by beating together two small willow rods, they sing in unison the funeral-song.

There is a violent contrast between the bleeding singers and their vocal utterances, for the music in its major strains suggests sunshine, birds and verdure, and has a fleet, happy movement. Nevertheless, there must be some latent harmony between the song and the ceremony. Music, the Indian believes, has power to reach the unseen world. The spirit of the dead man can hear the song as it leaves the body, and the glad cadences are to cheer him as he goes from those who have been dear to him on earth. He hears only, he cannot see—so the song is for him; the bleeding wounds of the singers are expressions of the loss felt by the friends of the dead; his kindred can take note of the manifested sympathy—the wounds are for them.

It is a custom among the Omahas to cease wailing at a certain point in the funeral ceremonies, for the reason, they say, that the departing one must not be distressed as he leaves his home behind him. It is also customary after a death to lacerate the limbs, as the shedding of blood expresses how vital is the loss. The funeral-song and ceremony, savage as they appear at first sight, are really full of tender unselfishness, and indicate a strong belief in the continuation of life and its affections.—Century.

ADVERTISING FOR IT.

The merchant was rather blue, and his wife, noticing it, asked what the matter was.

"Matter enough," he sighed. "I've been looking over my books and I find I've lost money every month for the last year."

"How did you lose it?" she inquired.

"Oh, I don't know," he said wearily, shaking his head.

"Nor where?"

"No."

Then she thought a minute and remembered what she did when she lost her pocketbook, and her face brightened.

"Why don't you advertise for it?" she asked, innocently.

"By George," he exclaimed, "I never thought of that," and the next day he had a big display ad. in the paper, and the next and the next, and in three months' time he was in clover up to his chin."—Detroit Free Press.

A CHINESE INVITATION.—The Chinese send three invitations to the guests that they desire to see at their great repast. The first is dispatched two days before the feast. The second on the day itself, in order to remind those they expect of their engagement, and the third just before the hour has struck, so as to show how impatient they are to see their friends arrive.—Hong-Kong Letter.

In a small town in New York State a lady recently engaged for her reception the services of the "Blankville Mandolin Quartet." Upon the stated day three darkies appeared on the scene with banjos.

"Why," cried the hostess, aghast, "I—I engaged the Mandolin Quartet."

"Yassum," said the leader. "We's dey."—Harper's Magazine.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA is a work of superlative merit, superior in its descriptive matter, and resplendent with 550 of the most beautiful half-tone pictures ever produced by the ingenious processes of experimentation and invention. But art and illustration have been surpassed by the discovery of a process whereby scenery is photographed in natural colors, and examples of this sublime discovery are now for the first time used in Glimpses of America. They are called Cameragraphs, because the camera does all the work of both printing and coloring; they are also designated as Heliotypes because no other light than the sun is available for their production, and require an exposure of six hours.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA has been pronounced by a thousand distinguished persons, the most exquisite work that the press of the world has yet brought forth. But its beauty and worth is not restricted to the 550 superb illustrations that present all the marvelous scenery of our country with the vividness of actual observation, for its value is immensely increased by the remarkably graphic descriptions of the author, Mr. J. W. Buel, who with a corps of three expert photographers spent two years traveling in a special photographic car, visiting every section of the nation, collecting facts and making pictures of the scenic wonderlands of America. The cost of their trip was $50,000, as they traveled a distance of 25,000 miles by car, horse-back, stage, boat and on foot, traversing every State and Territory that lies between the two oceans, and between Mexico and Alaska.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA.

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA will contain a series of eight super-magnificent Cameragraphs, an invention of the publishers, who have spent a fortune in perfecting the process. Nothing in the way of fine engravings or color printing can be compared with them for their indescribable beauty and matchless splendor, that seem to hold

All the Glories of Nature in their Embrace.

AMERICA

GLIMPSES OF AMERICA has no footnote explanations of the illustrations, but contains an historical and descriptive narrative, diversified with stories, legends, adventures and thrilling episodes that make the work more interesting than any novel, and

As Valuable as Any History,

because to Americans it tells a wonderful story, which they ought not only to hear but to know.

This Most Charming and Exquisite Pictographic Work

Is published as a serial, comprising thirty-two parts, one of which will be issued each week and in every fourth number a bewilderingly beautiful full-page Cameragraph will appear. Each part will contain sixteen pages of pictures and reading matter, in about equal proportions, the pages being 11x13½ inches in size. This paper has secured the exclusive privilege of distributing Glimpses of America in this vicinity, and takes pleasure in announcing that the first number is now ready.

HOW TO OBTAIN THIS PEERLESS WORK!

Inferior serials are now being sold at various prices per number, but we are able to offer Glimpses of America to our readers upon the following conditions, viz: Cut coupon from this paper and bring or send it to our office, together with ten cents, and we will either deliver any one part so ordered in person, or mail the same to any address without further expense.

Among the Martyrs.

Enroll him among the martyrs whose patient feet have trod
Over stormy paths and weary, the road that leads to God!

Strength in his soul was not wanting, though strength of frame was small;
With not a fear or murmur he answered the upward call.

The thirst for worldly honors made no laggards of his feet,
Through clouds that in the future hung, the call had sounded sweet.

So weary was he that he lay his burden gladly down,
And went to gain his promised rest, his mansion and his crown.

A warrior in life's struggle and a hero in the field,
Whose heart was full of mercy, and whose voice could comfort yield.

His feet will never tread again the weary path they trod;
Enroll him among the martyrs now going to be with God!

HONEST JEAN BEAUVAIS.

Jean Beauvais paced up and down his apartment with a troubled and unsatisfied air, too feverish to seek repose, although the night was far advanced, and ruminating bitterly over the difficulties of his position, which were far from being sentimental.

The only son of a well-known and highly respected shipping merchant of Havre, who died some years previously, from whom he inherited a prosperous business and abundant means, but neither his caution nor sagacity; he had made, on his own account, so many rank and unsuccessful ventures, that his wealth had dwindled down to insignificance — his credit, once so good, being completely shaken. The winter then ending had to him been a long series of misfortunes; twice he had risked largely on two Liverpool blockade runners, celebrated for their successful trips to southern ports, which were both taken by the southern cruisers; two of his ships, richly freighted from Brazil, perished in the Bay of Biscay, uninsured; his cotton speculations, entered into just at the close of the American war, resulted in a heavy loss, and a number of his oldest customers, unable to withstand the pressure of those difficult times, were forced to suspend their payments.

Reviewing his state of affairs from every point of view, he despaired of weathering the storm, and saw clearly that he would have to succumb.

Looking out of the window of the comfortable mansion, built with the honest earnings of his thrifty father, in a picturesque spot on the banks of the Seine, between Rouen and Havre, it wrung his heart to think that he must part with the home of his childhood, and that his old mother would suffer through his imprudence.

"There is no help for it now," he ejaculated, "and the day of humiliation for us cannot long be delayed."

As he gazed out in the clear moonlight, recognizing every well-known feature of the landscape, he thought the scenery around him never appeared so fair.

On the morrow he fully acquainted his mother of the ruinous state of his affairs, expressing his regret and remorse for the rashness and folly of which he had been guilty.

The old lady was grieved beyond expression to hear such a report, for she was proud of the prosperity created by her lamented husband.

"My boy," she said, "do what is right, place everything you possess in the hands of your creditors, keep nothing back from them; with the wreck of your fortune you may perhaps have enough left to begin life anew, in an humbler way, and in a better spirit. As for me, I will retire to Rouen, where I have means of my own sufficient to keep me in comfort."

Next week the commercial circles of Havre were discussing the failure of the old-established house of Jean Beauvais, and criticising the foolhardiness of the son, who had reduced to nothing, the fruit of his labors.

But one opinion, however, reigned among the creditors regarding the upright and honorable conduct of Jean Beauvais. He laid before them a true statement of his position, placed houses, lands, shipping and everything he possessed, down to his gold watch and chain, at their disposal. After thorough examination it was found that the assets amounted to 60 per cent of the liabilities. Jean gave them every assistance in realizing the value of the assets, and promised to pay the 40 per cent of deficit, if more successful in his next start in life.

On the last evening he spent in the old mansion he wrote the following note to Elise Desire, to whom he was betrothed:

My Dear Elise:—I deeply regret informing you that, through losses in business, I am completely insolvent, and will to-morrow be obliged to suspend payments. Little or nothing will be saved from the wreck. As you never possibly contemplated such an emergency, and as I could not consent to make you a partner of my adversity, I, in sorrow and sadness, release you from the engagement contracted with me.

Intending soon to leave Havre, I only add farewell, Elise, and God bless you!

Yours sincerely,
JEAN BEAUVAIS.

The parents of Elise sympathized with Jean in his misfortunes, and considered he had acted wisely; in their hearts they were glad that the sacrifice on his part was voluntary, which left their daughter free, and they congratulated themselves that his breakdown occurred then instead of six months later.

Elise, however, refused to listen to the voice of reason and entreaty. She had set her heart upon Jean, and his generous renunciation of her hand made her all the more determined to hold him to his promise. Early next morning, Elise and her maiden aunt wended their way up the hill toward Bellevue House, where they found him jaded and downcast.

"Jean," she said, "I am sorry for many things, but will never consent to be parted from you. You have no reason to despair of the future because you are at present under a cloud; in the patient and courageous discharge of fresh duties you will emerge from it perhaps happier than ever. I am not afraid of a few privations, which, after all, do not signify much, and will wait for you until you are ready."

A flush of pleasure swept over the countenance of the graceful girl, as she witnessed the strong man's concealed emotion and felt the pressure of his gratitude.

"Be it so," he said; "knowing you preserve a warm corner in your heart for me, I will do wonders, and with God's blessing everything yet may come right." With this understanding they parted, each feeling better and stronger after the renewal of the compact.

Meanwhile, Jean Beauvais' liquidation rapidly continued; his splendid mansion, elegant furniture, carriages, horses, lands, pleasure yacht and shipping, so many tokens of former opulence, were sold and transferred to others; his accounts, balanced by experts, resulting in the loss referred to, he keenly felt the insufficiency of his narrowed resources, and looked forward to the future with anxiety.

On taking a last survey of all that was so recently his own, he inwardly cursed his rashness and folly.

His domestic pets never seemed so attached to him as at that moment, and, while he tenderly patted the arched neck of his favorite riding-horse, it seemed more than usually overjoyed by his caresses. Unavailing regrets, fears and hopes, alternately chilled and fired his bosom as he turned his back upon the home of his youth and the scenes of his early associations.

Promenading leisurely through one of the leading thoroughfares of Havre, he was saluted and accosted by his friend Franck Renard. "You are just the very man I wanted to see, Jean, so come along with me," and they proceeded arm in arm to one of the principal cafes in the vicinity.

"Now, Jean, I'll tell you what it is. I have a clipper of a thousand tons burden lying in dock, ready to start for Brazil, without a captain, and would be delighted to give you an opportunity of displaying your nautical skill. You took your own yacht around the world two years ago, maneuvering her to the admiration of the old picked salts you had on board, and nothing that I know prevents you from assuming the command of the Jeanne d'Arc, now fully manned and officered, ready to proceed on her voyage. Take charge of her my boy, and I'll give you $2000 a year and 10 per cent of the net profits."

Jean Beauvais, who had always a strong passion for the sea, and felt conscious of his fitness to undertake the duties required, readily assented to the proposal of his friend, and expressed his gratitude for the preferment.

Duly installed in his quarters in the Jeanne d'Arc, he set about mastering the details of his new position. While overhauling the consignments for the agents of Franck Renard at Rio de Janiero and Buenos Ayres, his mercantile experience showed him that two important articles might be added with advantge, that would sell easily during the hot season at the Antipodes—from November to the end of January—viz., the light muslins of Mulhous, and refreshing Strasbourg beer.

Having completed his cargo with 20 casks of the latter, and bidden adieu to his mother and betrothed, he set sail from Havre one fine September morning, en route for Rio de Janiero, accompanied by the best wishes of his friends and relatives. The rough Norman and Breton seamen sailing under him soon discovered that much kindly interest in their welfare lurked beneath the stern discipline he maintained.

The good ship, with every sail unfurled, sped prosperously on her way, and in the course of a month reached her desired haven.

Having discharged freight and disposed of consignments in both Rio de Janiero and Buenos Ayres to his entire satisfaction, he then prepared freighting his ship for the return home with wool, skins, hides, horns, tallow, rice, coffee, cotton, etc.

On completing his cargo, he again steered homeward, and safely reached the port of Havre a few days before Christmas. After delivering his report regarding his sales and purchases, Franck Renard enthusiastically complimented him upon his magnificent run, which he considered one of the most remunerative ever made. The grief of his old mother was comforted by the cheering narrative of his first trip and the evidence it afforded of his future prosperity; while the joy of Elise at his success was unbounded. A halo of hope gilded their season of festivities, which softened down the asperities of life and invested the future with visions of delight.

It was, therefore, with tender interest in each other's welfare that they touched their glasses at parting and pledged each other's health and happiness.

The seasons waxed and waned, bringing increasing prosperity in their train to Jean Beauvais; three years had elapsed since he assumed command of the gallant barque, which he skillfully guided from port to port.

His good judgement, honestly exercised from the best and purest of motives, his accurate knowledge of general wants and his well-grounded calculations, insured the success of all his speculations and rapidly enriched Franck Renard, who never regretted the choice he had made of a captain.

On sea and ashore, in storm and sunshine, the manly form of Jean Beauvais trod with a firm step the path of duty, and never quailed in the presence of danger. He had striven with all his might to attain the object in view, and the hour of reward for his self-sacrifice had sounded.

He placed sufficient funds in his agent's hands to settle the loss of 40 per cent, sustained by his creditors, and consoled himself with the reflection that his motto of "honor bright" was worth while defending and preserving.

On a fine spring morning the sun shone softly through the stained glass windows of Notre Dame de Bon Secours at Rouen upon the figures of Jean Beauvais and Elise Desire, in the act of receiving the nuptial benediction in the presence of his mother, Franck Renard and a small party of friends.

The Captain's handsome face, bronzed with exposure to the heat of the tropics, beamed with satisfaction, while Elise, in her whole bearing, was expressive of the triumph of womanly faith and constancy.

From the balcony of her elegant apartment on the seashore at Havre she could see the Jeanne d'Arc proceed on her voyage and disappear in the distant horizon; or she could watch anxiously for the welcome signal announcing her return, the sight of which would gladden the heart and dispel her fears.

Everything prospered in the hands of Jean Beauvais, and the cup of her earthly bliss was filled to overflowing.

At the end of the year following his marriage with Elise, a succession of storms of appalling duration and fury swept over the north Atlantic which resulted in the loss of many a gallant ship and crew. The Jeanne d'Arc, homeward bound, was for three days and nights exposed to the violence of a tremendous hurricane. Scudding under bare poles she was tossed like a nutshell in the seething billows, and driven far out of her couse to the southward. The first officer and four men were washed overboard, and the rest reduced almost to helplessness through fatigue and exposure. It needed all the energy of Captain Beauvais to keep them to their posts and prevent them from despairing. On the fourth day, however, the storm abated, when they found themselves off the north coast of Spain; the sea here and there covered with spars, cordage and floating wreck, showing where greater misfortune than theirs had been endured.

On sailing through the Bay of Biscay they perceived a large East Indiaman making signals of distress, being apparently in a helpless condition; on exchanging signals, it was found that her rudder was gone and that she had sprung a leak, her hands being completely used up in working night and day at the pumps; she was slowly sinking and drifting toward the shore. Captain Beauvais sent twelve men to their assistance, fitted up a temporary rudder, and after two days' of incredible exertion, succeeded in towing her into the port of Brest. The cargo, which was of great value, having been saved, the amount of salvage money due to the captain and crew of the Jeanne d'Arc was very large, Captain Beauvais' share along being estimated at $50,000. The Jeanne d'Arc, after being ten days overdue, was signaled at Havre, to the intense relief of Elise, who had recently given birth to a lively boy.

On reaching home, broken down with fatigue, his heart was overjoyed by the fresh blessings vouchsafed to him by providence, and tears of gratitude fell upon both mother and child.

No longer exposed to the dangers of the deep, he now shares the responsibilities of full partnership with Franck Renard—a living example of what may be achieved by a noble purpose and an upright fulfillment of the duties of life.

PASSING RICH WITH A FORTUNE OF $27.

"I had a glimpse of life in the Kentucky mountains the other day that I will not soon forget," said a capitalist to a Louisville Courier-Journal reporter. "I made a trip into that section as a representative of a syndicate to look at some coal lands. I went as far as I could by rail, and then took a horse and rode into the wilderness. Toward night I brought up at a little cabin of which I had been previously informed, and made arrangements to spend the night there. This cabin was about 20 feet long by about 12 feet wide. On the ground floor it was all one room. Above was a loft, to which access was gained by means of a ladder and a hole in the floor. There was a little corn growing around the place, and there were two hogs. In the rear of the cabin was a low shed, open at one end and with a slanting roof. It was just big enough to hold a cow at night. The cow, which was a lean, woe-begone animal, the two hogs and the corn constituted apparently the entire assets of the place.

"In this establishment were living a man and his wife and eight children, the oldest being 12 years. They lived on corn-meal and milk, with occasionally some pork. Both the man and the woman were barefooted. The elder children had clothes enough to cover their nakedness, but the younger were not so fortunate. The man seemed to be a slow, dull sort of a fellow, who had lived in destitution so long that he had become used to it. The woman was different. Her face wore an expression of abject despair. If a painter had wanted a model for a picture entitled 'Hopelessness,' he need have gone no further. After supper the man went out to feed the hogs and the cow, and do other 'chores.'

"I talked to the woman for about an hour, and succeeded with great difficulty in getting her story. Her pride stood in the way of her telling me anything for a long time. During all the time in which she talked the expression of dull listlessness, to which her face had become habituated, never left it but once. Then a look of something like happiness came over her features. This was when she said they had not always been poor. 'We weren't always this way,' she said. 'We were well off once. We saved enough, him and me, so that we were rich. We had $27 laid away once.' This was her idea of wealth. Twenty-seven dollars! She went on to say that the children had come fast, that a cow had to be bought, and that she cost $18. The children had fallen sick, and a doctor had to be brought in from civilization, and he cost $5, and so it went till their fortune had gone, and they had nothing left of that magnificent $27.

"The next morning I paid them my lodging. I had slept in the loft and the family had slept in the room below. None of them took off their clothes. I had brought with me a hugh lot of roast-beef sandwiches, and ate these for my supper and breakfast, for I had been warned that I probably could not get anything to eat there. Before leaving I took $27, and wrapping it up in a newspaper, left it on the table in the middle of the room. Then I rode away, feeling vastly pleased with myself, and knowing that there was one mountaineer's family in Kentucky that had recovered its lost fortune."

HOW THE MINOT'S LEDGE LIGHTHOUSE WAS BUILT.

Work could be carried on only from April to September, the sea being too rough at other times to admit of the workmen gaining a footing on the edge, or even of approaching it with safety. The first blow was struck Sunday morning, July 1, 1855. The building of Minot's Ledge Lighthouse was a work for humanity, and therefore Sunday, the first day the weather had been propitious for beginning operations, was utilized. The weather allowed of only one hundred and thirty working hours at the ledge that entire season. Preparing a partly submerged rock to received the foundations of a granite tower is quite a different matter from digging holes in the ground on shore. Guards in boats constantly plied around the ledge to pick up workmen who might be washed off into the sea, and their services were frequently required.

Not until July 9, 1857, could the first stone be laid. During that season there were again only one hundred and thirty working hours at the ledge. Anticipating such a contingency, Captain Alexander had picked out a force of good all-round workmen, so that when work had to be suspended on the ledge the morale of his force would be maintained by keeping the men occupied on shore in shaping the granite blocks for the tower, and fitting the courses on a model, so that no time would be lost in correcting errors after the blocks had been shipped to the ledge. As a matter of fact, work on the model disclosed several miscalculations which would have caused annoying delay had they not been discovered in time to be rectified on shore. The tower was completed September 16, 1860, in 1102 hours and 21 minutes, at a cost of $300,000. In shape it is the frustrum of a cone, one hundred and fourteen feet and one inch in height, including the lantern.—Gustav Kobbe, in the January Century.

DRAWN BY A STUMP SPEAKER.

"I think that one of the funniest contrasts I ever heard drawn in a campaign speech," said Representative McDowell of Pennsylvania, "was in the Hayes-Tilden campaign, made by a man named Rogers in my county. 'Let us suppose Gen. Hayes is elected,' he said, 'and we look into the East Room of the White House. What do we see? There is Mr. Hayes, with his family around him, with the open Bible spread upon his knees, and he is leading in evening prayer. But suppose Tilden should be elected! What do we see then? There would be Tilden, with John Kelly on his right, and John Morrissy, with a faro bank, upon his left. The picture of William M. Seward will have disappeared from the wall, and in its place will be the portrait of William M. Tweed. Which picture will you choose between, my fellow-citizens? Let us vote for Rutherford B. Hayes, and then we can die with clear consciences and in the hope of a happy resurrection in the realms above.'

"I think," added Mr. McDowell, "that this touching appeal would have had more effect on me if my friend Rogers, as soon as he concluded, had not asked me where he could get a drink."—Washington Post.

COXEY.

It is a curious conglomeration of beings which is marching toward Washington under the banner of this now celebrated man, and the country is not a little curious to know what the reception will be. There is little cause for alarm, however, as the authorities have had ample warning of their visit, and will doubtless be prepared. But the important question is what the "Commonwealers" will do when disbanded? The turning loose of so many unemployed—should all or a large part of the different delegations reach the capital,—is a matter not to be lightly considered. It is announced that none but reputable, law-abiding men are enlisted, and that the leaders are pious, etc., but the seizure of trains and the defiance of the officers does not seem to bear out the statements. Why the officials in cities and towns should feel compelled to provide quarters for these delegations, or show them more consideration than any other body of tramps, is hard to understand. Pittsburg, Pa., sized up the whole business and did the right thing, arresting any found outside the camping ground as vagrants.

Bands of recruits for Coxey's commonweal army are marching toward Washinton from all parts of the country, and while there have been no serious outbreaks people are on the alert, especially railroad managers, who are calling on the authorities for protection should the mobs become desperate.

At Omaha last Friday 5000 people turned out and thronged the public square when a committee reported that the Kelly "Industrial" army had not yet obtained transportation. After the report was heard the crowd organized and elected officers and started on foot for Council Bluffs, Ia., when they were met by a delegation of workingmen, when a committee was appointed to wait on the railroad officials and make their demands known. A mass meeting of women of Council Bluffs was held, and they marched in a body to where the conference was held and demanded that the army be given a train, which was refused. The crowd finally captured a train of 11 box cars and started for Weston, when it was met by Kelly, who announced his decision not to accept the train, as under his rules of peace he could not do what was an express violation of the law. He greeted his friends warmly, and an open-air meeting was held at which speeches of felicitation were made by Kelly, his lieutenants, and the visitors. It is probable the army will now go down the river by boat.

The Seattle Wash., contingent of the Coxey Army has 940 recruits, and several citizens have been agitating the question of raising money enough to charter a through train for them and send them on. Resolutions were adopted by the men that in case of a strike on any railroad the army would uphold the American Railway Union, and that any one who reported for work on such road would be dishonorably discharged.

The combined industrial army of San Francisco and Oakland is 850, and they are on their march to Washington. All had blankets and were warmly clothed.

The contingent of Coxey's army under Gen. Frye forcibly took possession of an eastbound freight train at Terre Haute, Ind., Wednesday morning. There were about 300 in the crowd, who told the engineer that the industrials had railroad men in their ranks and that if he refused to start the train he would be put off and one of their own men would take the throttle. The trainmen were unable to prevent them riding, as the industrials were determined, and any resistance would have resulted in bloodshed. The officers of the army claim to have paid the railroad company for transportation as far as Brazil, 20 miles east of Terre Haute, but after the loading of horses, wagons, cooking utensils and blankets, the train pulled out, leaving the industrials in Terre Haute. They spent Tuesday night in using the railroad ties for fuel.

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad has issued instructions to its employes under no consideration to move trains controled by unauthorized persons, or upon which members of the army attempt to ride.

The New England delegation is fairly on the march to Washington, and appears to be quiet and orderly. People in many of the towns have been generous in their contributions of food. The Boston "Swiftites" left Providence at 1.30 Wednesday with six new recruits, having 59 in their ranks. About 40 men had applied but only six were accepted.

Mary Gilmartin, a clerk in Cincinnati, was shot and killed in that city Wednesday while on her way to work. The murderer gave his name as George Reed, but letters found on him prove him to be Father Dominique O'Grady, a Catholic priest, recently from Ireland.

The town of Otis has been stirred up this week by the elopement of Edmond A. Davis and Laura Waters, a fourteen-years-old girl. Davis is about 40 years old. They were married Monday morning, and Davis was arrested Tuesday. The girl's father will see that the law in relation to such matters is enforced.

The severest earthquake of the last ten years shook Athens, Thebes, Atlanta and several other cities Friday night. Hampden County Conference

The annual spring meeting of the Hampden Conference of Congregational churches was held in the Congregational church of this village Wednesday. It was an unusually large meeting, and full of interest throughout. Rev. Ralph W. Brokaw of the Hope church, Springfield, was moderator, Rev. Louis F. Giroux of the Immanual church, Springfield, scribe, and Rev. E. B. Blanchard of Thorndike assistant scribe.

The conference opened at 10 a. m. with a devotional service conducted by Rev. R. L. Swain of South Hadley Falls. Reports from the churches were given by the scribe, an address was given by Rev. E. N. Hardy of Holliston on "The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip."

This address aroused considerable interest, as was shown by the many questions asked the speaker at the close. It is an organization of men in the churches for leading young men to personal service for Christ, and is found already in eleven denominations.

At 11 o'clock Rev. E. A. Reed, D. D., of Holyoke, preached a sermon on "The Preacher's Difficulties." The conference was so much pleased with the sermon that it voted to publish it for distribution among the churches of the conference.

The question of a Congregational Ministerial Bureau was discussed. It is proposed to establish a bureau for the state, to aid churches without pastors in finding the right men, and ministers without churches to find the right pastorates. At 1 p. m. a collation was served at the Converse House for the delegates. At 2 o'clock the afternoon session opened with a praise meeting led by Rev. N. Vander Pyle of North Wilbraham. An interesting and stimulating discussion on "Wastes" was held, Rev. F. B. Makepeace of the North church, Springfield, speaking on "Wastes in Administration," Rev. G. S. Lee of the Park church, West Springfield, on "Wastes in Effort," and Rev. F. S. Hatch of Monson on "Remedies for the Wastes."

Two of the National missionary societies were represented. Rev. James L. Barton, president of Harpoot College, Turkey, and acting secretary of the American Board, spoke very interestingly of the missionary work in Turkey. Rev. G. W. Moore, field missionary of the American Missionary Association, gave a stereopticon lecture on Missionary Work Among the Negroes and Mountain Whites of the South, the Indians of the West and Alaska, and the Chinese of California. The fine views and clear descriptions were much enjoyed.

The conference closed with an address by Rev. G. W. Wiach of Holyoke, on "The Value of the Conference," which proved a fitting close to a day of good things.

A Fortune in a Burned Building.

Austin Davis of Glendale, in Wilbraham, whose buildings were burned a few weeks ago, has made an interesting discovery in the ruins, having found a quantity of Spanish, English and American coins, gold and silver, the American pieces bearing dates prior to 1840. The first piece found was gold melted together, and was supposed to be iron, and thrown aside, but its nature was afterward learned and search made for more, resulting in the discovery of quite a quantity of the metal, enough to fill a large dishpan and require the services of a team to remove it. What the value is has not yet been determined. The stuff had been stored in tin boxes, and a considerable part was found thus. Besides the money in the boxes there was a quantity of charred paper, which was no doubt bank bills or securities. The peculiar part of the matter is that Mr. Davis does not know exactly how they came there. More than 20 years ago, when Mr. Davis lived in Ludlow, Geo. Hobart, a bachelor of about 60, came to his house and brought two very heavy trunks, bound with iron, and secured with strong padlocks. When the man went away he left the trunks with Mr. Davis without any suggestion as to their contents or disposition. When Davis sold his farm in Ludlow he moved with his effects these two trunks and stored them in the attic of his house. Many times he has been curious to know what the trunks contained. After the fire he again thought of the trunks, and began to examine the ruins in a hope to solve the mystery. His first find was $10 in silver dimes. He has sifted the ashes in that part of the ruins of his house where the treasure was found, and thinks he has all the metal. He can place no exact estimate on the value of the find, as the most of it is meted. However, some idea of his good fortune may be had, when it is said that among his richest single gleanings is a tin tobacco box containing $300 in $5 gold pieces. The coins not melted would indicate that the whole might have been a collection of old and rare specimens, and must have had a value far beyond their intrinsic worth. They bear date from 1760 down. Among the curiosities is a copper piece inscribed on one side as follows: "Tobacco tends to idleness, poverty, strong drink, vice, ill-health, insanity and death;" on the other, "I will never use tobacco in any form." Davis has not seen or heard from the man for the past few years. He has worked as a refiner in Providence, R. I., and has occasionally visited the Davises. During these visits he had spent much of the time in the room where these trunks were stored. He has always been very secretive in his business affairs. The money will be held until further information of the missing man is obtained.

The electric company has been at work this week paralleling the line which runs the street lights in the other villages, going through Thorndike to Breard's corner, thence to Three Rivers and back to this village, in an endeavor to get rid of the induction which telephone users have complained so much about after the lights are started up at night. It is expected to have the line in working order to-night, and the previous trouble done away with.

Everyone who saw part one of "Glimpses of America" last week was enthusiastic in its praise. In the district court last Saturday James J. Creighton of Providence was sent to the house of correction for one month for drunkenness. W. H. Brewster, for drunkenness, paid a fine of $10. Brewster had just received about $400 back pension money and had started in to have a good time. He had succeeded to the extent of about $80 the first day the money was in his posession, and would have disposed of the whole sum in short order if it had not been taken care of for him. On Monday Louis St. John of Palmer paid $5 for drunkenness, while J. J. Breen of Feeding Hills was sent to the house of correction for two months for the same offense. James Murphy and John W. Connor of North Wilbraham paid $10 each for drunkenness. Charles Houck, a 15-years-old lad of Monson, who was complained of for being a stubborn child, had his case continued for a week, until the 26th of May. On Tuesday Albert Gould of Monson, for the illegal sale of tobacco, had his case continued until next Tuesday.

The selectmen met Monday afternoon and granted five of the licenses for the year beginning May 1st. The favored ones are M. D. Sullivan & Co. at the Nassowano House and L. W. Caryl & Co. in this village, T. J. Clifford at the Clinton House in Thorndike, M. J. Moriarty & Co. at Bondsville, and J. F. Hartnett & Co. at Three Rivers. One more license remains to be awarded, and it will without doubt go to W. A. Fitzpatrick & Co. of the Converse House in this village at the meeting of the board next Monday. Four druggists were also granted licenses, LeGro & Lynde and O. P. Allen in this village, A. P. Adams at Thorndike and Charles E. Mason at Three Rivers. John Murphy was appointed special night police for this village, and J. F. Luman at Thorndike. A telephone was ordered placed in the house of the chief engineer of the fire department, so that he can be called to any of the villages at any hour of the day or night at short notice.

The attention of the superintendent of highways is called to the manner in which the scraper is being used on some of the roads. There seems to be a disposition on the parts of the ones using it to rip up the whole width of the highway wherever possible, without regard to existing circumstances or a thought of the future. By reason of the large amount of foot travel between Thorndike and this village a good firm path had been made at the side of the road for nearly the entire distance, but this has been almost wholly destroyed by the scraper without any benefit to the highway. In some places it is entirely scraped away, and in other places only in part, but enough to spoil it for pedestrians, who must now wade through the loose dirt. A good path for pedestrians has been ruined and the highway made no better than it might have been and the path retained. The same thing has been done in other places, but it should not be allowed.

The ladies of the Congregational church will give their annual May breakfast and dinner next Tuesday. Breakfast will be served from 6.30 to 9, and dinner will be ready at 2. Sirloin Steak, Ham, Veal Steak.
Boiled, Fried and Scrambled Eggs.

Residents of Brimfield are circulating a petition to the county commissioners for the building of a new road from a point near the schoolhouse at the Cooley crossing along the south side of the river to Blanchardville, then after crossing the river by the bridge now there and following the present road to the beginning of the cut under the tracks of the Boston & Albany railroad, the proposed road is to go between the Bennett house and river and continue along the fill of the Boston and Albany tracks and intersect the Palmer and Monson road at Tenneyville. The petitioners claim that the present highway under the tracks of the railroad at Blanchardville is dangerous, in that there is a curve in the road on each side of the tracks, and that a driver in that place has no warning of the approach of trains until they are overhead; that Brimfield horses, being back away from the railroads and unaccustomed to locomotives, are naturally afraid of trains, especially under the existing conditions, and by the proposed new road they would avoid crossing the tracks of the railroad. As the road is almost entirely within the limits of Monson and Palmer the project will naturally be opposed by those towns.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, April 25, 1894.

Complaint is made that petitioners for legislation are shut off without sufficient opportunity to be heard on account of the haste of the Legislature to adjourn. The Gloucester water matter, which is of much local consequence, is a case in point. Another is that in which a committee had reported reference to the next Legislature on a matter on which they had not time to give a hearing, but which was finally recommitted for hearing because it was found quite easy to do all that was wanted. But the most important matter to be thus neglected for lack of time in the haste to get through is the Torrens system of land transfers. This promises great pecuniary saving to the people but it is postponed year after year because it is too important to be acted upon,—too important to be reported to the Legislature early and, when it is reported, too important to be acted upon late in the session. If the public would not crowd the Legislature quite as hard to go home, and if the reputation of the Legislature were made to depend more on the quality of its legislation than on the shortness of the session, the people would be better served and better off in the end. Not all the clamor for speedy adjournment is reasonable.

There are two sides to the trout bill which Gov. Greenhalge has vetoed, and only one has been given much of a show in the papers. That is the side of the wild trout,—in other words, the side of men and boys who want to kill the wild trout for fun, the side of sportsmen who have so much influence with the Legislature, the side of summer landlords who want trout brooks preserved as inducements to boarders on their vacations, the side of country people generally perhaps, who regret to see trout disappear as they regret to see partridges and grey squirrels trimmed off by sportsmen. But the other side is that of the great public, of the mass of people of small means, of the many thousands who never saw a trout brook, who cannot get into the country at all and who are pressed continually to procure enough of cheap and nutritious food. Mr. Gilbert of Plymouth, who has been treated with injustice in some quarters as a lawbreaker, has demonstrated in his private ponds at Plymouth that trout may be raised easily and profitably for a food supply. The trout pond may be made a valuable supplement to the poultry yard, and the demonstration is that an equal worth of food supply in the form of fish can be raised more cheaply than in the form of poultry or any other kind of meat. In healthfulness and toothsomeness the trout stands high. Unquestionably it would be a great benefit to the state to develop trout raising as an industry. The pleasures of sportsmen and the wishes of private owners of wild game do not seem a reasonable offset to the material needs of a large proportion of the people. Certainly the case has two sides, and it is not likely that the plea for the trout as a commercial food supply will cease with the veto of Gov. Greenhalgh.

The House has given time and considerable support to the bill of Mr. Bridges of Deerfield to raise the license fee of druggists from $1 to from $50 to $500. Notorious abuse of the privilege of liquor selling by druggists was the reason for the introduction of the bill, and there was no attempt to deny the strong assertion that the drug stores in no-license towns and cities are "the worst places on the footstool" for making drunkards. But the bill was defeated on the argument that if the fee were raised, the druggists would feel justified in selling liquor in order to get their money back.

One of the most perplexing problems for the Legislature to solve is that of liquor license commissions for all the cities in the state which vote license. The whole liquor question is a poison in politics. Here in Boston the issue of licenses by a commission appointed by the mayor was found to result in such corruption that the system was abolished and the present Board of Police was substituted, whose members are appointed by the governor. License cities like Fall River and Holyoke, where the liquor power is strong, send delegations to the state house (unofficially, of course,) Republicans and Democrats, to urge the passage of the bill. On the other hand, the traditions and principles of local self-government are against any interference by the state in these details of administration. If the self-reliance of the people is destroyed by taking from them, with or without their consent, the responsibility for a strong local government, what will be the next step in the way of centralizing power and emasculating the strength of the people in politics? Here is a question which is away beyond any present party lines and ought not to be settled on partisan grounds. The bill has been postponed to next week in order to get more light.

The bill for wide tires, which the House defeated by a large majority Wednesday afternoon, has not been an annual at the state house for 20 years, as stated by Mr. Galloupe of Beverly, but it has been up four times, unless I am mistaken. Strenuous opposition is always made to it, but the idea of the benefit to roads, wagons and animals of wide tires is surely spreading, and the demonstration of the great economy in the long run, in spite of the first cost, is gaining ground. When the fine and costly state roads are made, the folly of allowing narrow tires to cut them up will be more apparent, and by and by this much-ridiculed wide tire bill will become a law.

It was a surprising vote which the House gave on Wednesday in favor of the bill to establish a telephone commission,—47 to 107 on rejecting the bill. As a similar bill has been defeated by the Senate, it is not to be expected that this will pass, but the vote shows the spread of the idea of state control of prices, as well of corporations, and it is becoming a fair question where this tendency of the state to regulate business will stop.

Charles H. Houck, a lad of 15, was brought before the district court at Palmer Monday, charged with being a stubborn child. His case was continued until the 26th of May. In the course of the examination by the court the lad admitted that he drank some, and used tobacco. Being questioned as to where he procured his tobacco he stated that almost any of the dealers would sell it to him, and that he had procured his last supply at the Monson Tea Store, being served by the clerk, Albert Gould. As the law forbids the sale of tobacco to persons under 16, a warrant was issued for the arrest of Gould and he was brought before the court Tuesday, the case being continued until next Monday for trial. It has become very easy for lads under 16 to procure all the tobacco they wish in town, and a severe penalty is likely to be imposed in this case.

The funeral of Delia B. Foley, daughter of Timothy Foley, took place from her late residence on North Main street last Friday, and was largely attended. The services were held in St. Patrick's church in the morning at 9.30, a requiem high mass being offered by Rev. J. F. Lee. The casket, as it rested in the center of the aisle, was covered with flowers. Among the tributes were a pillow, basket of La France roses and a boquet from the family, a scroll from shopmates, and numerous other offerings from home and distant friends. The pall bearers were William Hughes, Michael Loftus, John Crowley, Edward Lyons, Richard Hughes and Thomas Crowley. Father Lee made some feeling remarks based on the words "I saw a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations and tribes, standing before the throne in sight of the Lamb, clothed in white robes." The beauties of a truly Christian life were dwelt upon, and the reward of such depicted. The many virtues of the deceased were spoken of, particularly her simplicity, obedience, and above all her charity.

The adjourned town meeting was held Monday afternoon and there was a good attendance. The amounts appropriated were those recommended by the committee appointed at the annual meeting, although two or three attempts were made to change them, but without success. W. A. The question provoked a lively discussion, but failed to be carried by a vote of 172 to 108. E. S. Snow spoke at length on the matter, claiming that the vote in regard to the affair taken at the last town-meeting was not legal, as the check-list was not used, but the vote was taken by dividing the house. He said that the vote was not a two-thirds vote. Samuel Allen also spoke in favor of rescinding the vote. Nathaniel Dwight and L. W. Dillon spoke of letting the vote stand. CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

A Blessing Indeed.

What would this poor, weak humanity do were it not for those strong, noble, restless spirits who are ever searching the caverns of knowledge for good of mankind? Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who a few years ago gave to the world that priceless boon, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, has now introduced another blessing for the sick and suffering. He is the most successful specialist in curing all nervous and chronic diseases, and offers to everyone, far and near, the opportunity of consulting him, free of charge, through his system of letter correspondence.

Write him about your complaint and send for his symptom blank, and he will return you an exact explanation of your case with advice, free of charge, and tell you how you can be cured. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, and his answer always gives the sufferer a perfect understanding of the disease. If you wish to avail yourself of this great physician's skill, write him at once about your disease and you will undoubtedly be cured.

Cleaned out, as well as in every thing that is cleaned with Pearline. Nothing does its work as well, as easily, as quickly, or as cheaply. It divides the labor with you, and doubles the result. With it, you can wash the finest clothes harmlessly; without it, you will want to do the roughest housework carelessly.

Never peddled. 286 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

March, April, May.

March, April and May are the arches of a bridge which bind the season of ice to that of roses. Therefore, the spring is a trying time for the average person. The system at this season of the year simply needs cleansing; remove the impurities from the blood, cure that growing trouble, constipation, and you will be able to battle with the coming seasons in perfect health. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, more than any other medicine will do this for you. It will purify and dissolve the excess of uric acid in the blood, dispel that worn out feeling, make you sleep and eat well. It is prescribed by physicians everywhere for just this purpose. Druggists sell it for $1 a bottle.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 105 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

PIANOS

What We Do

Some families want a piano, but keep putting it off till they can pay the whole price cash down.

The result is that meanwhile they go without, or else waste money in renting, and then, perhaps, when the money is ready it is too late to enjoy or profit by the use of an instrument.

A small payment to begin with, and a little more than bare rent monthly will buy an Ivers & Pond Piano in the same time it would take to save up the money, and the investment is all the time safer than a savings bank, for the customer has the piano all the time.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

He called her "dear," he took her hand,
Somehow she seemed to understand;
And when the soft June days had come,
When roses bloom and brown bees hum,
Two souls with but a single thought
Had sweetly into one been wrought,
And later, as the months went by
On wings that always seem to fly,
He paid her bills, year after year,
And with a sigh, he called her "dear."

"All flesh is grass!" shouted the minister. "Keep off the grass," prayed the girl who had a perfect horror of getting fat."—Puck.

"Parker left the Scaddlebury reception in a huff." "Did he? What was the matter?" "His hat-check was number 402. Parker is one of the 400."—Harper's Bazar.

"She—"How the fashions change!" He—"There isn't much change in the pocket-books, except they are worn shorter and lighter this year."—Texas Siftings.

W.—"No you believe it is bad luck to open an umbrella in the house?" S.—"Well, I should say so. I opened one the other day and the owner happened to be there and recognized it."—Philadelphia Record.

Professor (a little distracted)—"I'm glad to see you. How's your wife?" "I regret it, professsor, but I'm not married." "Ah! yes, then, of course, your wife's still single."—Gazette.

She—"Where did Miss Fosdick get her lovely golden hair—from her father or her mother?" Maud—"She must have got it from her father. I notice his is all gone."—Brooklyn Life.

"When I look into your eyes, Jennie, dear," he said, "it surprises me to remember that you are a teacher of a primary class." "Why, George?" she asked. "Because, dear, you pupils are so large."—Harper's Bazar.

Mr. Fussy—"Madam, you know that I always insist on having my eggs boiled soft, and these are as hard as stones!" Mrs. Lady (timorously)—"Well, I wish you'd speak to the cook about it. I don't dare to."—Harper's Bazar.

"Why do you weep so much?" "Because my lover has gone to the army for three years." "But those will soon be over; then he will return." "Yes; but I'm afraid that in the meantime another man will marry me."—Fliegende Blatter.

Father—"Now Jimmie, I'm going to give you a hard thrashin'. D'ye wanter know what for?" Son—"Nossir, I don't cos if you tells me what for then I'm going to say I hain't done it, en you'll lick me twicet as hard fur lyin' about."—Life.

He—"What do you say, my dear; shall I have my life insured?" She—"You don't feel as though it would shorten your life, do you, darling?" He—"Pooh! No." She—"Oh, well, I don't believe I'd go to the expense of it, then."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Mrs. Honeymoon (to bridegroom, in railway train)—"Do you love me?" Old Party (confidentially, from other seat, to bridegroom)—"She's asked you that forty-seven times already. I get out here, but I'll leave the score with this gentleman by the window."—Tid-Bits.

They tell in Texas of an absent-minded man who was hurrying with a package which he wished to express, and seeing that he could not get to the depot in time, laid down the package that he could run faster, and after a hard run he reached the train all right, but minus the package.

A Little Mixed. Mrs. Wickwire—"Oh, by the way, dear, when does Lillian Russell get back her throne?" Mr. Wickwire—"You mean Liliukalani, don't you?" Mrs. Wickwire—"Maybe I do. I have seen both of their names in the papers so much that I get all mixed up."—Indianapolis Journal.

A couple of ladies were looking into the window of a picture store on Woodward avenue at a fine painting. "What does it represent?" asked one, scanning it closely. "A Venetian scene," answered her friend. "Excuse me, madam, but you're wrong." spoke up a floridly dressed woman with the air of a connoisseur; "that's a scene in Venice. I know, because I've been there."—Detroit Free Press.

"So," he said huskily, "you send me away." She could not deny it. "Am I to have no assurance from you?" "No," she answered. "And why?" "Because you have more assurance now than you know what to do with." And Algernon has not yet determined whether he will show his desperation by joining the army or smoking cigarettes.—Washington Star.

The young man in the dress suit had attended a festive social gathering in the Auditorium building, and was slowly wending his way homeward. "Off'sher," he said, addressing a policeman at a street corner, "wh-where c'n I get a cab?" "If you will go two blocks west and one block south," said the officer, you will see two cabs. Climb into the first one. The other won't be there."—Chicago Tribune.

At the close of the lesson the teacher made a few remarks intending to inculcate a moral point. Noticing the very close attention of one of the little girls she extended her remarks a little for the especial benefit of the l. g. who said at their conclusion "Why teacher how funny it is, when you talk your bottom jaw keeps going, up and down, up and down, and your other jaw don't move a bit!"—Boston Transcript.

AT TOCCO-IE.—An old lady in Ogglethorpe Co., Ga., boarded the northbound R. and D. train. At every station she funneled her hand to her ear and screamed out to the conductor:

"Is this Tocco-ie?"

Annoyed by her persistent query, the conductor said:

"Madam, when we get to Toccoa, I will let you know."

Presently a party of picnickers got aboard, and the conductor in the confusion of getting the ladies all seated, passed Toccoa, and several other small stations before his promise to the old lady recurred to him. Remembering, that by a recent ruling of the railroad commission of Georgia, the tenure of his position was jeopardied by such negligence, he ordered all the brakes on, and at the end of fifteen minutes he had backed into Toccoa.

"Madam," he said, reaching out for the old lady's bandbox and green cotton umbrella, "this is Toccoa."

The train was already half an hour late and his accent was impatient.

"Thankee, sir, thankee," (reaching and fumbling down into her green reticule, and finally fetching out a little round box), "my sis Sue told me I mustn't furgit to take my pill when I got at Tocco-ie."—Boston Times.

They were passing a fruit store on Jefferson avenue.

"Oh, my," she exclaimed, "look at those strawberries. Aren't they a lovely red?"

"Of course they are," he replied; "that's the way they blush at the price asked for them."—Detroit Free Press.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address,

Dr. G. W. Babcock, of Chelsea, Mass., says: "It gives me great pleasure to speak in the highest terms of your delightful preparation, 'Paskola.' One of my young lady patients has gained six pounds and says she feels like a new creature."

Mr. James C. Collin, of Syracuse, N. Y., says: "PASKOLA is indeed a food, and a royal one, too. I have already gained six and one-half pounds."

Mr. Charles E. Isaacs, 413 Main street, Worcester, Mass., says: "I have tried many doctors and countless patent medicines—all were of no avail till I took 'Paskola.' To eat a meal is now a pleasure. Heretofore it has been a torture."

Mrs. R. P. Casy of Newton, N. J., says: "I prize 'Paskola' beyond my feeble description. It has accomplished more than you claim for it."

Mr. J. Calvin Barnard, of London, N. H., says: "My friends and doctor thought I must die, but the first dose of 'Paskola' gave me a little appetite and I begun to revive. I have gained twenty pounds in five weeks."

Mr. M. Leonard, of Biddeford, Me., says: "I have derived more benefit from two-thirds of a bottle of 'Paskola' than from all the medicine I have used in the past six months."

Emma M. Otis, of Perinton, N. Y., writes her druggist: "Since taking 'Paskola' my digestion has been much benefitted and neuralgia greatly relieved."

Mr. D. J. Kelleher, 13 Charles street, Somerville, Mass., says: "I have gained four and one-half pounds since beginning the use of 'Paskola, and feel ever so much better.

A TRIPLE MIXED.

Mrs. Johnson came home the other evening with her face "wreathed in smiles," as the novelists have it.

"Well, what are you grinning at?" was the cordial greeting of her lord and master.

"I heard something funny down town," she answered.

"Well, what was it?"

"Oh, nothing much. I happened to meet little Johnny Figg, who used to keep the apple stand across the way, you know, and he's got a better one down town now. I asked him how he was getting along, and he says to me, 'Oh, I'm still keeping a stand, you see.' I thought it was the cutest thing I had heard for a good while."

"Oh, did you, did you, Maria? If ever I see where the laugh comes in, I'll try a smile, even if I have to get up in the middle of the night to do so," was the crushing reply, to which she deigned no answer.

About two o'clock in the morning Mr. Jason was awakened from a dream of being stabbed by a masked assassin' to find his wife energetically nudging him below the fifth rib.

"Oh, Jehiel, I had that wrong," she twittered in a tone of one who has made a great discovery. "Johnny said his business was at a standstill. You see the point now, don't you?"—Tit Bits.

When a Wilkinsburg papa went home from the city a few evenings ago he found his five-years-old daughter in a state of great excitement. She buzzed about, full of a valuable secret, and eager to be questioned, for an important domestic event had occurred in the house next door, during the day.

"What is the matter, Bessie?" asked the father.

"O papa!" she replied, "you can't guess who was born to-day!"—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Tramp—"I jus' dropped in, mum, to offer my new cure for indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred ailments, mum. It may prove a great blessing to your family, mum, and I charge you nothing for the prescription."

Housekeeper—"Well, I must say that's reasonable enough. What is the cure?"

Tramp—"Live on plain food and give your rich and indigestible dishes to the poor. I'm the poor, mum."—Tit-Bits.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

PEOPLE WHO CANNOT EAT.
Eating is a natural necessity. It ought to be a pleasure. Yet many people look upon it as a task. Do you?
You shouldn't. It is a bad sign. So long as you suffer from this, you will be thin and sick. What you eat, you eat because you thing you must. You don't eat enough to properly nourish yourself, you are really slowly starving.
The trouble behind it all is indigestion. Your stomach doesn't want any food. It knows if it got it, it couldn't digest it.
You must humor your stomach, or it will break down altogether. Give it pre-digested food. PASKOLA will help it along till it gets better.
You cannot keep up without eating, yet if your stomach rebels, medicine will never make it work right. PASKOLA will. But then PASKOLA is not medicine.
Everybody knows that PASKOLA is a pre-digested food, made of grains and fruits, and that it is relished by the weakest stomach. Everybody who has tried it, has experienced after meals that delicious sense of perfect digestion exhilaration, added strength and increased appetite that everybody knows can only be produced by PASKOLA. Why not try what a bottle will do for you?
Dr. G. W. Babcock, of Chelsea, Mass., says: "It gives me great pleasure to speak in the highest terms of your delightful preparation, 'Paskola.' One of my young lady patients has gained six pounds and says she feels like a new creature."

Sometime.

Sometime, when life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgment here had spurned,
The thing o'er which we grieve with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how, while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me:
How, when we called, he heeded not our cry,
Because His wisdom to the end could see.
And even as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So, God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.

And if, s metimes, commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out this potion for our lips to drink.
And if some one we love is lying low,
Where human kisses cannot reach the face,
Oh, do not blame the loving father so,
But wear your sorrow with obedient grace.

And you will shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God gives his friend;
And that sometimes the sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon his love can send.
If we could push ajar the gates of life,
And stand within and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart!
God's plans, like lilies, pure and white, unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart,
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.
And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say: "God knew the best."

—Mary Riley Smith.

ADAM HOLCOMB'S WILL.

Adam Holcomb was dead at last—dead after seventy years of money getting, and the grave had closed over him. He had no children, for he had led a single life, induced, so it was said, though nothing was certainly known, by an early disappointment, which had warped his nature and made him lead a solitary and selfish life, given up to Mammon alone.

Adam Holcomb was dead, and yet no one knew what disposition he had made of his money.

Three days after the funeral the next-of-kin and possible heirs were collected in the office of the lawyer, in Gray's Inn, who was custodian of the will and private papers of the deceased. They were few in number, for the family was not a large one. There were but three, and these three may be briefly described.

First came James Holcomb, a nephew of the deceased—a vain, selfish, worldly man of about forty years of age, all his thoughts centered upon himself and his own family, who had never been known to give a penny for any charitable purpose.

Next came Harvey Holcomb, a cousin of the last-named, and about the same age. He was tall, thin and angular. He belonged to the legal profession, in which he had managed to pick up considerable money, though his reputation was none of the best. He was considered tricky, willing to undertake any cause, however disreputable, for money. He was married and had a family, for whom he provided in a grudging manner. He, too, had nourished sanguine hopes of finding himself much better off after his uncle's death.

Last came a young man, presenting a strong contrast to the other two. He was of light complexion, brown hair, clear blue eyes, and an attractive face. He was barely twenty-five years of age, very plainly dressed, and with a modest manner which prepossessed one in his favor. He was the son of old Adam Holcomb's youngest sister, who had married a poor country curate, and their son, Alfred Graves, was studying medicine, for which he had a decided predilection. But he had been cramped by narrow means, and was even now teaching in a village school, hoping to obtain enough by this means to pay for his college course. He had applied to each of his two relatives present for a small temporary loan to help him complete his studies, but without effect. He had been curtly refused by both.

He had come here to-day as a matter of form, without the slightest expectation of benefiting by the will of his late relative. He had known him but slightly, and never received any encouragement upon which he could build a hope. Yet if he could receive a legacy of even $500, he thought, it would help him materially. That was the amount which he had vainly sought to borrow of the merchant and the lawyer, now present with him at the reading of Adam Holcomb's last will and testament.

The merchant and lawyer conversed while waiting for lawyer Brief.

"Have you any idea, cousin, how much the old gentleman had accumulated?" asked James Holcomb.

"I have heard it estimated at $250,000," was the reply.

"That is a large sum. I hope he has not been unjust enough to squander any of it on charitable societies."

"I hope not. That would be a great piece of injustice to his relations."

"He never dropped anything to you about the disposition he intended to make of his property, did he?"

"Not he! He was a close man, very," said the other. "I once tried to worm something out of him, but didn't get much satisfaction."

"What did he say?"

"He said that he thought of endowing an asylum for fools and lunatics, and that I could tell whether I was likely to be benefited by his so doing."

"Ho! ho!" laughed James, shaking his capacious sides; "he had you there, eh?"

"I don't see it," said the lawyer sourly.

"You didn't appreciate the joke, eh?"

"It was a foolish piece of impertinence. However, everybody knows what the old man was, and I let it pass. If it had been any one else I would have given them as good as they sent."

"But you were afraid it would spoil your chances, eh?"

"As to that I have no idea. There is no question that we ought to be joint heirs."

"True" returned James. That would give $125,000 apiece. That would satisfy me."

"How about young Graves' chances?" queried the lawyer, glancing sharply to that part of the office where the young man was quietly seated.

"Oh, he'll get nothing," said the merchant contemptuously. "He belongs to a beggarly stock, and a beggar he'll remain to the end of his days. Going to be a doctor, I hear."

"Well, I wish him joy in his profession if he ever gets into it, which is somewhat doubtful. He wanted to borrow $500 of me the other day."

"And of me. Did you let him have it?"

"Not I. I've enough to do with my money without giving it away Of course he'd never have repaid it."

"No, I suppose not. The coolness of some people is refreshing."

"Well, I take it for granted old Adam was much too shrewd to lavish any of his money on such a fellow."

"Trust him for that."

The young man was engaged in reading a volume he had taken up, and did not hear this conversation.

It was interrupted by the entrance of Mr. Brief. Both the merchant and the lawyer greeted him with deference and cordiality, as a man whose words might bring them prosperity or disappointment. Alfred Graves rose in a quiet, gentlemanly manner, and bowed with a courtesy that was habitual to him.

"Gentlemen," the attorney said, "I hold in my hand the will of your late relative. I will at once proceed to read it."

Of course his words commanded instant attention. All bent forward to listen.

After the usual formula came the following items:

"I give and bequeath to my nephew, James Holcomb, the sum of $5000, to be held in trust for his children.

"To my nephew, Henry Holcomb, I likewise give the sum of $5000, to be held in trust for his children, to whose sole use the income shall annually be paid.

"To my only remaining nephew, Alfred Graves, I give the sum of $2000, to be appropriated to his own use as he may see fit.

"I set aside the sum of $200,000 to establish a library in my native town, one quarter to be appropriated to the erection of a suitable building, and the remainder to constitute a fund, of which the income only shall be employed, for the purchase of books."

Here the man of law made a pause. The merchant and lawyer sat with looks of blank disappointment and anger, which they made no attempt to conceal.

"He had no right to defraud his relatives in this way," muttered James.

"It is a miserable imposition," said Henry Holcomb, to put us off with such a niggardly sum."

"For my part I am quite satisfied," said the young man. "I have received more than I expected."

"Oh, yes; it will be a great thing for a beggar like you," said James sarcastically.

"I am not a beggar," returned the young man, proudly.

"Gentlemen," said the lawyer, "I have not finished reading the will." He continued:

"My faithful old dog, Scipio, who is now somewhat infirm, I trust one of my nephews will be willing to take home, and treat indulgently for the sake of the master to whom he was attached."

"That's cool!" ejaculated James. "As for me, I don't choose to be bothered with the dog."

"But," said the lawyer, "since your uncle has given you a legacy, are you not willing to incur this slight care and expense?"

"I must absolutely refuse. Mrs. Holcomb does not like dogs, nor do I. Moreover, my uncle has treated me too scurvily for me to inconvenience myself much on his account."

"Then will you take him?" asked the solicitor, turning to the lawyer.

"Not I," said he, shrugging his shoulders. "The dog may starve for aught I care."

"And you, sir?" turning to Alfred Graves.

"I will assume the charge of Scipio," said Alfred Graves. "It is a slight acknowledgement for my uncle's legacy."

"You may find him troublesome."

"That will make no difference. While he lives he shall be comfortably cared for."

"What a model nephew," said the merchant, sarcastically.

"Good young man," said the other relative, with a sneer.

"Gentlemen," said the attorney. "I will now read the codicil."

The two older men looked at each other in surprise, which changed into rage and dismay as they listened.

"To that one of my nephews who shall agree to take charge of my dog, being yet unacquainted with this provision of my will, I bequeath the residue of my property, amounting, as near as I can estimate, to $100,000."

"You knew of this," exclaimed the elder men, turning wrathful faces towards Alfred Graves.

"Not a word," said the young man. "I am as much astonished as you can be."

"No one knew of it except myself," said the attorney. "I congratulate you, Mr. Graves, on your large accession of wealth."

"I receive it gratefully. I trust I shall make a good use of it," said the young man. "I hope now to repay my parents for the sacrifices they have made in my behalf."

"If I had but known," said the merchant, with bitter regret. "I have thrown away a fortune."

"And I," chimed in the lawyer ruefully. But there was no help for it. The deed was done. The two disappointed men left the house, feeling anything but grateful to the uncle who, they persuaded themselves, had cruelly wronged them.

But there was a modest little home down in Hertfordshire that was made glad by the news of Alfred's good fortune; for the young man, as soon as he had arranged matters in London with the old lawyer, departed immediately for home to impart to his parents the joyful news.

He met his father outside the little cottage. The clergyman could hardly believe his ears, and it was not until Alfred had insisted upon his father taking half the money, and it had been transferred to the local bank in their joint names that Rev. Graves and his wife realized that their days of penury had closed. Notwithstanding the smallness of his salary, the home had always been a happy one; but now it was a thousand times more so. In their hands the money brought a blessing with it, for it has been made a fountain of good deeds and charitable influences.

THEY SPEAK THEIR MINDS.

There are many people in this world who pride themselves upon the fact that upon all occasions, whatever comes, they speak their minds.

I often wonder if they realize how offensive their collossal egotism is!

It will generally be found that these utterly frank people are narrow-minded, dominated by one idea—that of self; persons who set up standards that the world at large will accept, and persons, too, who are ill-natured, and disappointed in what the world has done for them, or, rather, in what they have brought upon themselves by their attitude toward the world at large.

While they are freely speaking their minds, we are often meditating upon the comfort they must take in feeling that their judgments and opinions are of such moment.

Did they once realize how entirely superfluous their frank expressions are, what little weight they bear, they would be very chary of thrusting so much of their minds upon their fellows.

In spite, too, of all they say, they enjoy the inflicting of small wounds by their criticisms and expressed opinions. For, while these last deserve no attention, they yet sting, and hurt, and rankle, and this being the case, the utterly frank person has accomplished his mission.

The only cure for this sort of thing is the setting-aside of such a frank person from our list of friends. Only in this way can he or she be taught that society will not tolerate what is rank discourtesy.—Mae D. Frazar, in Malden Mirror.

"Don't sit on this bench with me, George, please!" said Maud. "Why not?" asked George. "Because it is only strong enough for one," said Maud. "Then, I say, Maud, can't we be made one?" suggested George.—Boston Transcript.

Do Your Best.

Do your best and be not troubled
Should some others better do;
If your work should fail to please you,
Don't give up, but strive anew.

Do your best, for slighted labor
Ne'er can satisfaction bring;
Do it quickly, time is passing,
You must seize it on the wing.

Many duties lie before you,
Trials oft your strength shall test;
But you need not fret or worry
If you only do your best.

Do your best, get not disheartened,
Though the task seem hard and long;
God is ever near to help you,
He can make the weakest strong.

Helen Hunt, in Home and Country.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

HINTS ABOUT HOUSE CLEANING.

To clean painted walls and ceilings use Gold Dust, or any good soap powder in warm water. First wipe or brush the paint, then wash with a large sponge. If the paint is very dark it is necessary to put a little of the powder upon the sponge. Wash about a yard square, then rinse with a cloth wet in clear warm water, and afterward wipe quickly with a dry cloth. The best results are obtained when two women work together, one washing and the other following to rinse and dry. Mineral and sand soaps used on ceilings and walls are never satisfactory.

A bath of hot alum water upon a floor from which a carpet is taken, after it is thoroughly cleaned, is said to discourage Buffalo bugs. Put about two-thirds of a cup of powdered alum into a pail of hot water, stir till the alum is dissolved; dip a clean mop into the alum water, drain all the water from the mop that will run off without wringing. Wipe over the floor and leave to dry without a second wiping.

Some housekeepers put powdered sulphur, others powdered salt petre about the edges of the floor under the carpets to prevent Buffalo bugs. Other housekeepers say naptha poured around the edges of the carpets occasionally will kill them, but although no doubt all of these and many other precautions will decrease and discourage the Buffalo moth, I have yet to learn that anything has been discovered that will entirely exterminate them. It was formerly said, "It is the neat housekeeper who has 'Buffalo bugs,' the careless housekeeper never has them," but my observation has been that in those sleeping rooms where the carpets are most carefully swept and wiped with a damp cloth frequently during the year, there are fewer carpet bugs than in the room where less care is taken of the carpets.

Clothing tied up in cotton bags and hung up is free from the ravages of this pest, and if garments are taken from the closets and the closets are washed and aired and the garments well shaken and aired every few weeks during the year, the closet may be kept clear of any moth.

Undoubtedly sulphur fumes will kill all forms of insect life. Put sulphur on a shovel set fire to it and hold the shovel under beds and in closets where pestiferous insects are found. The difficulty with sulphur fumes as are exterminator of the Buffalo bug is in bringing the fumes in contact with the insect life.

It would be worth while to thoroughly fumigate carpets that have the Buffalo pest after they are cleaned and while they are off the floors.

The sulphur fumes will kill flies and mosquitoes if sufficiently strong, and after the fumes have cleared away there is an especially sweet and agreeable freshness about the room and furniture in which it has been used. I have known it used in rooms having a bad odor caused, as was supposed, by dead rats within the walls, with good results. Occasionally such a misfortune befalls a housekeeper, but if the room where the odor is observed is fumigated with sulphur every morning the nuisance is overcome and in a week or so the odor disappears.

Blankets put away for the summer are more easily packed if folded only once lengthwise and then rolled over and over from end to end, or folded once widthwise and then rolled. Old linen table cloths are the best packing sheets. Fold them tightly around the blankets, tucking in between the blankets lumps of camphor done up in soft paper or naptha balls; when the sheets are pinned close around the blankets enclose all in paper and tie up firmly. It is not absolutely necessary when blankets are put away for a summer only to put the camphor or balls into the blankets, if the balls are scattered on the floor of the rooms or closet where they are kept, unless the closet has been much infested with insects, in which case every precaution should be taken. Powdered borax and sugar is used to keep down the water bugs. These insects seem to flourish more vigorously in some seasons than in others. A little care ought to keep them out of all except the oldest houses.

People who live in new or comparatively new, light and airy houses must blame their methods if insects trouble them. It is the people who live in old houses, especially old wooden houses, who have to take the most care about such pests.

A GUILELESS GIRL.

They sat in the front row at the theater (she was a middle-class maiden to whom a chaperon was an unknown social element), and he began to imagine that he had never been in love before. She was so innocent, so childish, so unused to the ways of the world that he longed to fly with her to some desolate island far, far away.

"You will go out with me again to-morrow night, will you not?" he asked.

She shook her head slowly, and the innocent blue eyes turned to his.

"I am sorry," she said, "but I cannot give you another evening until next week.

"Not until next week?"

"No. You see," she whispered, "you are the newest bow to my string, and I merely took you on to make up the list of seven—one for each evening in the week, you know. Now, if I took you out of your turn, it wouldn't be fair to the others—see?"—Vogue.

PATTI'S PRICE FOR A GLASS OF MILK.—A story of Mme. Patti comes from Craig-y-nos. She stopped recently at the door of a cottage to drink a glass of milk while the lady of the house regaled her guest with fabulous stories of Mme. Patti. Then the mistress of Craig-y-nos made herself known. "I am Mme. Patti," said she. The rustic gammer was delighted, and with charming naivete, answered:

"Oh, then, will you be kindly pleased to sing me a song?"

"Very well," answered the other. "Shut the door and I will sing."

The door was shut and Mme. Patti sang "Home, Sweet Home." In other words, her glass of milk was paid for with notes to the value of £100. The old Welsh body should be a proud woman.

"Doctor told mamma the other evening that if I didn't give up wearing fashionable bonnets I'd have neuralgia." "And so you are going back to the good old comforable styles?" "Nonsense, Lena; if people only make up their mind to it neuralgia isn't such an awful thing."—Judge.

PALMER NEWS.

Killed by the Cars.

Antoni Raychel of Chicopee Falls was struck by the cars at Thorndike last Sunday and fatally injured. Raychel was a Pole and a musician. He had been playing in Thorndike with an orchestra of his countrymen, who had furnished music at a Polish gathering. The men were about to cross the railroad at the upper crossing when the milk train came along. Raychel was slightly deaf, and as he did not see the train he stepped in front of it and was struck by the engine. The train stopped and picked him up, returning to Palmer with him. Dr. William Holbrook was called, and after an examination decided that nothing could be done for the man's relief. It was thought that he would live but a short time, but he breathed for nearly 24 hours after the accident. A post mortem examination showed that the skull was badly crushed and imbedded in the brain. It was also cracked the whole length and the neck was fractured. The body was taken charge of by Raychel's brother, who took it to Chicopee for burial. Raychel was married, his wife being in Poland. He had no children and had been in this country about three years. The accident was not due to any carelessness on the part of the employes of the railroad.

Considerable criticism was heard on the street Monday and Tuesday regarding the action of the physician in charge. Raychel reached this station about 5 20, the stretcher on which he lay being placed on the floor of the baggage room, where it remained until about 5.30 the next morning. Although his injuries were pronounced fatal and it was supposed he could live only a few moments, he continued to breathe, and after a while began to get restless and move his limbs. Dr. Holbrook, who had gone home, was again called, and again decided that nothing could be done for the man. About 5.30 Monday morning the man was taken to Loomis's undertaking rooms and placed on a mattress, where he breathed until 5 in the afternoon. An attempt was made to give him stimulants at the baggage room soon after he was brought in, but it nearly strangled him. The criticism is that he was allowed to lie on the floor of the baggage room all night when he might have been placed on a mattress, if not taken to some more comfortable place; that no attempt was made to remove his clothing, or to wash the blood and dirt from his face and hands; and that no efforts were made to stimulate him. On the other hand Dr. Holbrook asserted that the man was beyond help from the moment he was struck by the train; that he was totally unconscious and insensible to pain, as proved by experiments when first brought in, and that the most humane thing was to let him lie as quietly as possible. The autopsy certainly showed that nothing whatever could have been done for the man.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, May 2, 1894.

The council nominations of April 26 will come up for confirmation at the meeting to-morrow. That of Rufus R. Wade to be chief of the district police will be confirmed promptly. Criticism of the new commission on the unemployed is made by Republican legislators, who fear that Gov. Greenhalge has not looked far enough into the future, and that the action of this commission will plague the party for years to come. Prof. Davis R. Dewey of the Institute of Technology is all right, if he is experienced enough. He has the chair of statistics and economics. David F. Moreland was an active labor leader in the House a few years ago, and was a Hill Democrat in the Democratic state convention two years ago. The third member, James F. Cary of Haverhill, is of the Morrison I. Swift type of socialist, and believes that the supreme court decisions should be referred to the people for approval, as he has publicly said in the State House this session. He also believes that our American system of government is a failure. So there is an apprehension among Republican members of the Legislature lest the commission will declare for doctrines which will make a great deal of trouble.

With the debate on the first stage of the bill to establish a board of police for Fall River all opposition to it in the Senate ceased, and its enactment is assured. Thus there are now two cities, Boston and Fall River, which, by their own corruption and subserviency to the liquor power, have lost a very material part of their function of self-government. It is a depressing thought that in the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts, with our centuries of liberty and free public schools, the tendency of the times has been toward such corruption in the cities that the comparative purity of the other parts of the state must be brought to the rescue. But Massachusetts has a foreign population of two-thirds its total people. They have not been assimilated enough to our standard of personal integrity. On the other hand, it is a fair question whether Boston and Fall River could not govern themselves well if the money-making business men attended to politics as much as the liquor dealers do.

By vote of 10 to 19 the Senate has refused to pass the trout bill over Gov. Greenhalge's veto. Senator Atwood of Plymouth, representing the Gilbert interest, did his best to persuade the Senate, but party loyalty was stronger than his argument.

The taxation question is still waiting for the attention of the House, with the signs showing that the debate will be as warm as July weather when it is reached. It is admitted by those who want to repeal the law which exempts mortgaged real estate from double taxation that they have been beaten. They have been able to carry six of the eleven of the taxation committee with them to the extent that they have reported reference to the next Legislature, and so have been let down easy, as far as that goes. But the other five, including Mr. Wellman of Malden, who is the most influential man in the House, believe that such a report is not strong enough to put proper condemnation on this proposition, and so they dissent and report that no legislation is necessary. Another close division exists over the bill to compel sworn returns of all taxable personal property to be made. It was reported in the first place by Mr. Kneil of Westfield, but there was some confusion about this proceeding and the bill was recommitted. The committee is practically divided in the middle over the bill, and when everything is dropped in the haste to get through which is beginning to seize upon some members, to the detriment of legislation, there will be one of the hottest debates of the session over this bone of contention between the holders of real estate and the owners of personal property. Business men's organizations are expressing themselves strongly against the several plans for additional taxation which are supported by the farmers.

The vote of 127 to 53, by which the House rejected the bill to destroy the State House, by no means shows that the building will be preserved eventually. Some who voted with the majority say that it will be easier to tell next year what ought to be done after the whole rear of the building has been torn away, up as far as the hall of the House. Those who favor destruction say that after this has been done and only the Bulfinch part of the building is left, the next Legislature will be all the more sure to destroy the remaining part, for its incongruity with the annex will be evident to all.

President Butler predicts that the Legislature will be prorogued by Memorial Day, but experienced legislators know that the important matters in the House cannot be disposed of in that time, if they are not rushed through or suffered to drop, like the Torrens system, for lack of time because they are so important.

On Wednesday afternoon occurred the sixth death among members of the House which has taken place since the November election. This was that of Mr. Tompkins of New Bedford, and it was the most shockingly sudden of all, for he was riding up in the elevator with other members to attend the session of the House when he fell in what was supposed to be a faint. He was carried into the reading room of the House and died in a few minutes. No other House for at least 18 years has suffered the loss of more than three members before it adjourned. So the House of 1894 has a sad pre-eminence in this respect.

The House has been much in doubt what to do with the license commissions bill, but it has finally given a large majority for it after changing it so that the license commissioners shall be appointed absolutely by the mayors of license cities, instead of being appointed by the governor. The Republicans have held two dinners over the bill, and could not keep their own men in line for it. But in its present form it does not violate the principle of local self-government.

The musicale under the auspices of the Unitarian choir on Tuesday evening was a success, clearing quite a neat sum for their benefit.

The Amherst College Dramatic Club will present "A Woman Hater" at the town hall May 23, under the auspices of the Ware high school.

C. Hitchcock & Co. are showing in their large window an elegant line of fancy china, decorated with local views from photographs by C. W. Eddy.

The saloons are closed and the drinking fountains have not been opened, the sprinkling cart not started and no rain, so Ware is decidedly dry.

Rev. Austin S. Southwork, Ph. D., an ex-Methodist minister, will preach in the Unitarian church next Sunday. He is father of the pastor of the church.

There have been several severe forest fires in this vicinity recently. Some may have been by accident, but it is thought by many that most of them have been set.

A large bill board has been put up in the front yard of the house next to the Mansion House, for the posters of Scribner's circus, which is to exhibit here the 18th.

An effort is being made to start the watering cart, but it has been delayed until several have bought hose and are wetting the street in front of their premises themselves.

J. H. Donnelley has moved into the west corner store in the Hampshire House block. A large workshop has been finished for him under the carriage house of the stable in the rear.

Improvements are being made in the grounds surrounding the East Congregational church. Several large trees have been cut, and it is expected that concrete walks across the grounds will be put in.

The Junior Christian Endeavor society gave an interesting entertainment in the chapel on Wednesday evening. There was singing and speaking by the little ones, after which ice cream and cake were served.

The Ladue girl, caught taking money from the drawer in J. D. Smith's drug store, was sentenced to the industrial school. Her friends appealed and furnished $100 bonds for her appearance before the grand jury in June.

Frank A. Spooner, John H. Smith and Richard B. Yale have been granted licenses to sell intoxicating liquors for medicinal, mechanical and chemical purposes only, at their drug stores, paying $1 each for the privilege.

The latest in the Kennedy Hoyt trouble is warrants for assault with intent to kill, served on complaint of Kennedy against the Hoyts, who had a hearing on Wednesday, when they were bound over to the grand jury in the sum of $500 each for felonious assault.

Warrants have been posted calling a special town meeting next Wednesday evening, to see if the town will appropriate $600 in addition to the amount already appropriated for police service, to see about extending the sewer on East street, and to see if the town will appropriate money for public water, and how much.

J. W. Lawton Post, 85, G. A. R., is to celebrate the 25th anniversary of its organization at the town hall next Thursday. It is expected that prominent Grand Army officials, including the department commander and staff, will be present, and also William H. Olin, secretary of state. Leading citizens will occupy seats on the platform in the evening. After the exercises at the town hall a banquet will be served in Grand Army Hall.

It was reported a few days since that there was a case of small pox on Water street, but the board of health and overseers of the poor could find no trace of it. A large number have been vaccinated, and the work is still going on, although but few would submit to the operation if not compelled to do so by law. There are not a few who believe the law is an outrageous one, and that the enforcement of it causes more disease than if nature was allowed to take her course.

CARD OF THANKS.—To the many friends and neighbors who so kindly offered their assistance in our recent bereavement, we wish to express our heartfelt gratitude; especially for the beautiful floral tributes. GEORGE E., OLIVIA K., AND FRANK S. HOMER, Monson, Mass.

CARD.—We would return sincere thanks for the many expressions of sympathy, and kindly aid extended to us in our recent bereavement.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

An Imperative Duty.

What greater duty is possible than the care of health? Until recently it has been impossible for persons living at a distance from large cities to obtain the best medical advice without great expense. This is now obviated so that the poorest persons, in any part of the land, may consult the great medical authority on nervous or chronic diseases, free of charge, and without leaving their homes. Dr. Greene, of 24 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the most successful specialist in curing all nervous and chronic diseases, has lately adopted the plan of giving the sick everywhere consultation and advice by letter correspondence, free of charge.

Write him a description of your complaint and he will return you an exact explanation of your disease, with advice as to its cure, entirely free of charge. He gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, and will make your case so plain to you that you cannot fail to understand exactly what ails you. Dr. Greene is the discoverer of that wonderful cure, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. He uses nothing but harmless vegetable remedies in his treatment. What sufferer can resist such an opportunity as this to regain health and strength? Write him about your complaint and you will never regret it.

Main floor of Pynchon street building.

The town is agog over the Scotch ginghams at 15 cents. Such ginghams at such prices are enough to set housewives talking anywhere. Over 100 styles to choose from—and they're 32 inches wide. Some of the patterns won't last long at the present rate of cutting. It pays to be early.

Right aisle.

A pretty summer skirt—fast black sateen; with deep flounce, trimmed with two clusters of three rows of baby ribbon, embroidery between the rows. The trimming in pink, sky blue, white, red, black and lavender colors. You can buy it now for $1.69. $2 was cheerfully paid for it the earlier part of the season. Want to sell an extra large quantity this season—hence the price.

March, April, May.

March, April and May are the arches of a bridge which bind the season of ice to that of roses. Therefore, the spring is a trying time for the average person. The system at this season of the year simply needs cleansing; remove the impurities from the blood, cure that growing trouble, constipation, and you will be able to battle with the coming seasons in perfect health. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, more than any other medicine will do this for you. It will purify and dissolve the excess of uric acid in the blood, dispel that worn out feeling, make you sleep and eat well. It is prescribed by physicians everywhere for just this purpose. Druggists sell it for $1 a bottle.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.

Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

Dr. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

Dr. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

SLOCUM'S OZONIZED Norwegian COD LIVER OIL WITH GUAIACOL

What makes consumption? This question is less interesting to sufferers than one other: What

CURES CONSUMPTION?

Sometimes there is no cure at all, but that is not the case as often as folks suppose. Slocum's Ozonized Norwegian Cod Liver Oil, with Guaiacol, allays inflammation, stops that weakening cough, and promotes the formation of solid, healthy flesh on emaciated bodies. And it is pleasant to take. It contains healing properties of great value, scientifically combined. That answers the second question.

Dear Editor:—Westward the star of empire, etc., and so too old Sol in his fiery chariot; but he gets discouraged and goes back east every morning to get his pluck up and his heart cheered by the smile of civilized life. Don't talk of the westward march of progress when you have to set your watch back an hour every few hundred miles. We have reached the part of the country where every man used to buckle on a revolver and bowie knife; but they don't need to now, for they kill you at forty rods with a cup of coffee. We have just stopped at La Junta, Col., for "refreshments." I came away from the counter burning to write up a sensation. It was worse than a "hold up." It was a narrow escape, but the coffee gave out, and for that reason there were few lives lost. It grieves me to record that the Doctor, whose innocence ought to have saved him, was one of the victims. He put that cup of coffee where he couldn't get at it. The reason I smiled was that I knew that Nemesis was still pursuing him and paying him off for some of the vile doses he had given other folks. I did relent when I saw him going back for an orange, the price of which would deny him all luxuries for the balance of his trip, but it was the only antidote to be obtained in this region. In spite of his groans he still lives. It is like sea sickness—first you are afraid you will die, and then you are afraid you won't.

I wish I could describe a house we are just passing. It is about 10 by 12, made of old railroad ties end up, the roof of boards, plastered with mud. But that's luxury compared to the dug-outs.

The only doleful note for myself is that, as we begin to see the signs of advanced spring in Missouri, the orchards bursting into leaf and bloom, maple trees already green, and wild shrubs in full blossom, I thought of flowers further on as we went south into New Mexico, but the further we get the more like a desert it grows. The only apology for green is the sickly colored sage bush. The day is like June and the desert already looks as if summer drought had come. But let the flowers go, old snow-capped Pikes Peak looms up a hundred miles away! What characteristics, these western states have! Missouri, scattered homes and one-horse hamlets that look as if their only ambition was to exist; Kansas, one continuous stretch of plowed land prepared for great crops of corn and wheat; Colorado, cattle, cattle, with shanties and dugouts for people to live in. But oh! here are miles and miles of Colorado, that look like a desert of land, but it is clay, as the gullies washed out here and there show; but this land is cursed with alkali, much as the land of the dead sea is with asphalt. We keep going, going, and so it will be to-morrow and the day after. What will it be after two days of dreariness to suddenly descend into paradise of Lower California! Our beautiful sleeper, furnished like a parlor, is filled up with canary birds and a two-years-old chatterbox. Our train is the second half, for it is to be divided at Kansas City, but our division is long and loaded with tourists and seekers of new homes in California. The palace cars are exempt from many of the annoyances of the tourist cars, for the latter are full of promiscuous humanity. We have just reached the cactus country, the first I have ever seen in native condition. Now it will be cactus and yucca for two days. The former have begun to take on their yellow bloom. Soon we shall come into a taste of Mexican country, for we are speeding on towards Las Vegas and Albuquerque, and a long list of Spanish names of the towns of New Mexico.

The people all through this level stretch of country evidently dread one foe, the wind, for they build low, one-story houses, with roof made to shed the cyclone, and if they venture on a second story they prop it with telegraph poles. Here again is a hamlet of houses made of upright railroad ties. When we left home we thought we were running away from winter, and indeed this is a summer day, but we are running towards distant mountains and they are white with snow. After all it is one thing to study geography and look at pictures, but it's another thing and far pleasanter to see the real product of nature. It is dinner time again, and I have asked the doctor if he is ready, but he says "no, not after that cup of coffee at La Junta."

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's new discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work, and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular price 50c. and $1.00.

HENRY OWEN'S STORY.

A FULL ACCOUNT OF THE SUFFERINGS AND RESTORATION OF MR. AND MRS. HENRY C. OWEN RELATED TO A BLADE REPRESENTATIVE.

Most Excruciating Pain Endured—Physicians Helpless—A Remarkable and Interesting Narrative.

[FROM THE TOLEDO, O., BLADE.]

During the past few months there have appeared in the newspapers of the country, accounts of marvelous cures from the use of a medicine discovered by Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., and known as Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

These cases, many of them held by the medical profession as incurable, have been so frequently discussed in the newspapers, that it has led to many people using this preparation, and they invariably have had a similar statement to make. Many of these people have been told by their attending physician that "there was no hope," "recovery was impossible," and a little later was announced their restoration to health and strength through the use of Favorite Remedy. Recently the following letter from a well known citizen of East Toledo, attracted the attention of the Blade:

"No. 428 Euclid Ave., East Toledo, Dr. David Kennedy, Dear Sir:—I feel it a duty to write you of the benefit your medicine, Favorite Remedy, has been to my wife and myself. I suffered for years with kidney trouble, complicated with gravel in the bladder, and gall stones; at times I endured the most excruciating pain, so bad that I would have to be carried home from my business. My physician did not help me in the least; I kept growing worse. Finally Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was brought to my notice, and I used it regularly, following the suggestions found in a book wrapped about the bottle, and in a short time after that I was a well man; have never felt a return of the old troubles since.

My wife, who had been a sufferer from sickness peculiar to her sex, found no relief from any medicine she had ever used, until she began the use of Favorite Remedy, and that cured her. I haven't language to express the high esteem in which we hold Favorite Remedy; I have recommended it to dozens of people about here, and in no instance has it failed to benefit and cure.

Yours truly, HENRY C. OWEN."

The above letter was so remarkable as to be worthy of the fullest investigation, and the Blade determined to place the facts before the public for the benefit of other sufferers, and if unfounded, to let their readers know it. With these instructions a reporter was sent to the residence of Mr. Owen. In response to a ring of the door-bell, a lady appeared who proved to be Mrs. Owen. When your reporter made his mission known Mrs. Owen said she would gladly tell him about the good Favorite Remedy had been to their family. "For years Mr. Owen had been the victim of gall stones, complicated with kidney trouble and gravel in the bladder," said Mrs. Owen. "In spite of the efforts of physicians he did not improve in the least. I, too, had suffered for years with sickness peculiar to women, and one day I clipped from a newspaper an article referring to Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I told my husband that I thought it would help my trouble, and we immediately bought a bottle. I did not take many bottles before I noticed improvement, and then I suggested to my husband to try the remedy for his sickness.

"He did so, and felt the effects almost like magic. Mr. Owen continued to use Favorite Remedy until he has become permanently cured." Before going into further detail, it might be well to give in Mr. Owen's own words, a statement as to what it did for him. Mr. Owen, who is a man of about 42 years of age, with hair tinged with gray, was found at work as forman for the Chesbrough Bros.' Lumber Company, and in response to an inquiry as to the merits of Favorite Remedy and the genuineness of the letter published, Mr. Owen said: "I have not language to express the high esteem in which I hold Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I suffered for years with kidney trouble and gall stones; at times I endured pains which seemed almost unbearable. I used various prescriptions, and like everyone who is sick, took everything that my friends suggested. At last my wife told me of the good Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy had done her, and I concluded to try it. I used it and it cured me, and there is no mistake about that. I can refer you to many of our neighbors who have used it with the same results. One young man, a friend of mine, had been sick for months, and was doctoring with one of these $5 a week physicians. They did him no good, and I told him about Favorite Remedy. He had paid for a week's treatment, but left them and followed my directions. I saw him some days afterwards and he was feeling better and thanked me for my advice."

"Mrs. Owen has a similar story to relate. No human tongue can tell how she suffered, until she commenced to use Favorite Remedy. She had doctored with several physicians, and was about to give up in despair when this came to her relief. I am confident that if she had not taken Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy she would have been in her grave to-day."

Mr. Owen has lived in Toledo, and has been the head man at Chesbrough Bros. for years, and is prominently connected with the East Side M. E. Church. In communicating to the reporter in reference to his trouble, Mr. Owen said further that the pain he had was of a boaring, burning, lacerating character, and radiated through his abdomen and chest. He complained, when ill, of intense nausea accompanying the pain at first, the food being thrown up, but presently, after repeated retching, only some mucus acid and watery matter were expelled from his stomach. The action of the heart was feeble, and the circulation was correspondingly depressed. The duration of the seizure varied from a few hours to several days. "I am now," said Mr. Owen, "a perfectly well man; if it had not been for Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy I don't know what the present condition of Mrs. Owen and myself would have been."

Mr. and Mrs. Owen's friends and neighbors confirm the accounts of their sickness and their remarkable recovery, and it was also found that there were many other people in their vicinity who had been cured of various ailments by using Favorite Remedy. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is an unfailing specific for Bright's disease, kidney, liver and urinary complaints, rheumatism, gravel, stone in the bladder and sick-headache. It will cure the most obstinate case of constipation. In cases of neuralgia, or painful diseases, inflammation of the liver, dyspepsia, skin disease, jaundice, gastritis, loss of appetite, sleeplessness, nervousness or blood diseases, and female irregularities, it has cured where all else has failed.

The chief characteristics of Favorite Remedy is its agreeable quality and mild operation on the liver and bowels, absolute freedom from irritating cathartic action. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy can be purchased of any dealer in medicine at one dollor a bottle or six bottles for five dollars. A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and it never fails to cure when the directions are faithfully carried out.

A Sermon in Stone.

Fair and smooth the shining marble
Waited for the sculptor's hand
That should carve it into pillars,
For the royal palace grand.
And from east to west there hastened
Every sculptor who could bring,
Skillful hand or cunning fancy,
To the service of the king.

Then to each there was allotted
Precious stone or costly wood,
That, according to his talent,
He might fashion as he could.
But to him whose fame was brightest,
And whose name was widest known,
Gave he neither wood nor marble,
But a mass of common stone.

Yet he murmured not, but labored
Day by day in service true;
While beneath his patient torches,
Soon a wondrous beauty grew.
Stroke by stroke he toiled and struggled
To attain the end he sought;
Till the pillar stood completed
Into finest carving wrought.

Then the king received the sculptor
Into rank and high estate;
While the pillar stood in honor
Just before the royal gate.
Then remember, ye who murmur
At the task ye have to do,
Just because ye are so skillful,
Coarser stone is given you.

Other hands may shape the marble,
Other souls have wider room;
Nobler is the task before thee,
Make the common stone to bloom.
And the King Himself shall aid thee
In the fullness of His grace,
While within His royal palace
Shall thy labor find a place.

THE CASHIER'S STORY.

Our bank was the First National Bank of Scottsville, a town having a population of about 10,000. There were two or three private banks, but no other institution having the capital and dignity we carried. The stockholders numbered nearly thirty people, and all were residents of the city and county. Among them were four or five widows, and quite a number of minors and orphans were also represented. At that date I was a young man of twenty-three, and acting as cashier and bookkeeper for a manufacturing concern. I had $3000 in cash, and with this I bought stock in the new bank. The organization had been completed, and the institution was ready to open when the President sent for me and said:—

"James, I have known you for the past three or four years. Everybody in the town seems to speak well of you. Your employers tell me they have the utmost confidence in your integrity, and each one of our executive board has spoken in your favor. I have purchased $2000 worth of stock in your name to bring your holding up to $5000, and am authorized to offer you the position of cashier."

Yes, I had many friends. I was ambitious and industrious. I was also honest. No man could say I had ever wronged him in any manner. I don't mean to convey the idea that I was an exception. There has never been any scarcity of thoroughly reliable young men, nor will there ever be. I accepted the position with a feeling of gratitude toward those who had tendered it, and I had made up my mind to prove myself competent and worthy in every particular.

In one year we had grasped half the business of the county. In two years there was only one private bank left. We had any amount of money to lend on easy terms, and whenever an extension was wanted it was cheerfully granted. I had done more than any other man to bring about this state of affairs. I say so because all the officers and stockholders said so. In two years my salary was advanced three different times. No man could have been more fully trusted than I was. My advice was sought and invariably followed, and everybody complimented the bank on its sagacity in securing my services. I had been with the bank two years and four months when a singular incident happened. One evening as I sat reading in my room the thought came to me like a flash to rob the bank and escape to a foreign country. I pledge you my word I was frightened for a moment. It was as if a voice had whispered in my ears. Rob the bank! Why, I would chop off a finger sooner than embezzle a penny! What could have given birth to such a thought? I was upset and indignant, and yet I could not shake off the idea. To my alarm I found myself beginning to reason and speculate. It was as if I had a double, and the double said to me:—

"You are working like a slave to enrich others. You are getting a fair salary, but it should be double what it is. Why slave away for years to get a few thousand ahead when you can lay your hands on a fortune any day? It would be stealing, but then, we all steal. You are young and full of energy and ambition. With $50,000 to back you you can go to some foreign country and make millions and become a nabob in a few years.

I should have trampled such thoughts under foot on the instant. No man in a trusted position turns thief in a day. It is only after he has fought with temptation and been overcome—allowed himself to be overcome. I made an effort to rid myself of the thought, and it would have vanished but for a silly action on my part. A week later, as I smiled in contempt at the idea of my turning robber, I allowed myself to speculate on what would happen in case I did. That is, I wondered how much I should get hold of, what country I should go to, and so forth and so on. When I suddenly found myself greatly interested I jumped up in shame and confusion, but half an hour later was deep in imagination again.

It seemed as if the evil one did everything in his power to aid me after I had finally determined on my course. I had the "luck" to meet an American who had just returned from South America. He mentioned several sure things in the way of speculation, and painted such a glowing picture of the country that I was excited and impatient. The bank had large deposits that fall, and on the thirteenth day of September we had nearly $70,000 of what was called outside money. This was cash temporarily deposited by the county treasurer and by the cashiers of three or four manufacturing establishments. I had been waiting for such an opportunity. I could have taken from $20,000 to $35,000 almost any day, but I had planned to practically clean out the institution.

Between the fourth and eleventh of September I planned the details of my flight. I knew the time tables of the different railroads I should pass over, what day I should take the steamer, and every detail had been carefully worked out. I might be pursued, but I flattered myself that I had laid my plans too well to be caught. I planned to go to the bank at 9 o'clock in the evening and secure admission. The watchman would not hesitate to let me in. I would then assault and overcome him. He could not give the alarm before morning, and I would then be far away. I planned to make my coup on the night of the thirteenth. At the close of business on the afternoon of that day we had $107,000 in greenbacks in the vault. After a bank has closed its doors to the public at 3 o'clock p.m. there is work to keep the force busy for an hour or more. For a year I had always been the last one to leave, and my hour had been 6 o'clock. The trusty day porter was then left alone until 8 o'clock, when he gave place to the regular night watchman. At half-past 5 o'clock that afternoon and just as the last clerk had departed, the night watchman came to notify me that his wife had died suddenly and to ask that a substitute be employed. He named a man, but I told the him that I would make my own arrangements.

When the watchman had departed I notified the day porter that he might leave at 6 o'clock, as I had work which would detain me till about 8. Five minutes after 6 I was alone in the bank and its funds were under my thumb. The train by which I should leave town was not due until 10.50, and I was therefore in no hurry. I locked up and went to my boarding house to supper. At 7 o'clock I returned to the bank, pulled down the shades, lighted the gas, and in the course of twenty minutes had packed every dollar in the vaults into a satchel provided for the purpose. This satchel I placed on a chair outside the railing, and had sat down for a smoke when there was a rap at the door. I knew it was one of our force, but hardly expected to see the President himself.

"I expected it was you," he said as he entered: "Always the last to go. You are working too hard and must take a rest. At a meeting of the board to-day it was decided to give you a month's leave and a gift of $500 in cash. You have been faithful and efficient, and we wish you to know how thoroughly you are appreciated."

I don't remember what I said in reply, but I do remember that something like horror seized upon me at the idea of my own baseness. Right there within reach of his hand was the money I intended to fly with, and yet he was lavish in his praises of my integrity. He remained only a brief time, and soon after his departure I went outside to walk about and pan a little. I hadn't given up the idea of robbery and flight, but a still, small voice was whispering to me. On the first street corner I encounted a tramp. I was very much perturbed, but I shall always remember what he said. When he asked for alms I suppose I stared at him, for he added:—

"Yes, I'm ashamed of myself. It's my own fault that I'm down here. I let temptation get the better of me."

That was another prick of conscience, but he actually hurt me when he said:—

"Thanky, old man. May you never know what it is to lose the respect of the world."

Within twelve hours it would be known that I was an embezzler and an absconder! Not only that, but I was robbing widows and orphans and helpless old men! It seemed to me that I could already hear the newsboys crying out the headlines of the article telling of my shame and dishonor. I stood looking after the tramp as he walked away, when a hand was laid on my arm and I turned to confront the leading merchant of the town. I knew him well and favorably, although he had never been a patron of our institution.

"Look here," he said, as we walked along arm in arm. "I've always done business with Gleason because I found everything all right; but I'm going to begin with you to-morrow. Gleason is as good as gold himself; but I don't fancy his new cashier. He's a high roller, I hear; and some day he may turn up missing with all the boodle he can carry. No fear of that in your case."

And I had $107,000 all packed, and was only waiting for train time to become the meanest and most contemptible robber ever heard of in the state!

"Everybody is speaking in your praise," he continued, "and you deserve all that is said. Just keep a level head, and you'll find the road to honor and wealth."

When he left me I had to lean against a dead wall for support. The sound of his footsteps was still in my ears when I suddenly felt that I was saved. There had been a terrible struggle of conscience, but right had triumphed at last. I was pulling myself together to return to the bank, when a woman accosted me by name, and said:—

"How lucky I happened to see you! I was on my way down to Black's to see if he wouldn't take charge of this package till to-morrow. It's money I got only two hours ago—$2000."

"Come in here, and I'll give you a receipt."

"Never mind that. We all know and trust you."

Her parting words gave me a shiver. How little they knew me! A hundred rods away was evidence to make me an object of contempt in the eyes of every man, woman and child in the community! I had one more trial to undergo. Almost at the door of the bank I met two business men of high standing, who were holding an animated conversation.

"Heard the news?" asked one, as I came up.

"What is it?"

"You remember the clerk in my brother's office in Philadelphia who skipped out two years ago with $30,000? Well, he's been overhauled. He went to Peru, no doubt expecting to have grand times. It seems that everybody soon knew he was a thief, and he was an object of general contempt. He wandered about, always a marked man, and at last was so overcome with shame and degradation that he asked to be arrested and sent back. He was despised, insulted and plundered, and did not have one hour's solid comfort out of his stolen funds. He will go to prison for ten or fifteen years, and he might as well die then. Say, isn't it a curious thing that men will so destroy themselves?"

"Take your own case," added the other as he placed a hand on my shoulder. "You are young, but respected, trusted and honored, and on the sure road to wealth. You might crib $100,000 from the bank and get away, but would that compensate you for the sacrifice? No! Even a million wouldn't. I tell you, the man who has got to outlaw himself to enjoy his plunder must see days when he would almost give his life to be set back in the position he once held."

I passed into the bank and carefully locked the door behind me. My knees were so weak that I had to rest for a good twenty minutes. Even my hair was sopping wet with perspiration. When I felt strong enough I carried the satchel to the vault, opened the doors, and replaced the money, and it was not until the iron doors were locked again that I felt sure that I had won. There would be no watchman that night. I had planned it so. I took off my coat, kicked off my shoes, and made myself comfortable in an armchair. I did not feel sleepy, but when the day porter came at 7 in the morning to relieve the watchman I was sound asleep. It got to the ears of the officers that I had sacrificed my night because of the death of the watchman's wife, and the president feelingly said:

"Bless the dear boy! He's a man out of a million!"

Am I still cashier? Well, never mind about that. I am still regarded as an honest man, and I doubt if you could make any of my business frienes believe that I had ever been tempted for an instant.—New York Sun.

Nil Desperandum.

The fair-faced Aryan wanderers crossed
The Himalayas cold and drear,
With sinking heart but footsteps bold,
No song of praise, no voice to cheer;
Yet when before their vision dawned
The sunny Indian plains at length,
They viewed the dark cold mountains passed,
With triumph, and renewed their strength.

Oft we—in hours of doubt and dread—
Have watched our Himalayas rise;
Whose stern upheavals, cold and proud,
Blot from our view the starlit skies.
But when the mountain heights are passed,
And vales of sweet content are found,
We loose our sandals from our feet,
For where we stand is holy ground.

POPULAR SONGS.

Nearly all our popular songs have an interesting history. These songs have added interest when we know something of their origin and other circumstances connected with their use. In the following are given a few interesting facts about some of the most loved of our American songs:

The tune of "John Brown's Body" is an old camp meeting tune, the words being adopted thereto by a glee club of Boston in 1861. A Massachusetts regiment made them first noted by singing them in Fort Warren in 1861.

"Maryland, My Maryland," was composed by James R. Crandall, who yet lives at Washington, D. C. He is apparently about forty years of age, therefore he must have been a mere youth when he wrote this popular song.

"Home, Sweet Home," was written by John Howard Payne for an opera, and first sung in the Convent Garden Theater in London, creating a great sensation at the time. A hundred thousand copies were sold the first year, and while his publishers cleared $10,000 on it in less than two years, Payne got his tombstone in Oak Hill Cemetery.

"America" was written in 1822, by Rev. Samuel Smith, who yet lives in Massachusetts. He was a graduate of Harvard in the same class with Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"Hail Columbia" was written by Joseph Hopkinson, 1798, under the title "The President's March," and was always sung when Washington entered the theater. Joseph Hopkinson was twenty-eight years old when he wrote it, and it was set to music by a German music teacher named Roth, of Philadelphia.

"Yankee Doodle" is not of American origin. The words date beyond Queen Anne's reign, the time even older. It was called "Yankee Doodle" in derision of Cromwell. It was introduced in this country in 1775, in contempt of the ragged colonial soldiers. But the Yankees got the best of their deriders when the British at Concord and Lexington retreated, after defeat, by striking up "Yankee Doodle."

"The Star Spangled Banner," by Francis Scott Key, was written while he was watching the bombardment at Fort McHenry. While in a small vessel, all through the fight he anxiously watched to see if the flag was standing; all through the night, by the flash of bomb-shells, he waited and watched until dawn to see his countrymen gain the victory. The Baltimore American first printed it eight days after the battle under the title, "The Defense of Fort McHenry."

"Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," was composed by Thomas Reckot, in 1779. He was an actor and music teacher in Philadelphia.—Religious Telescope.

SPEAK KINDLY.

If the world could look away down deep into the hearts of the men and women it censures, would there be as much reason for blame as appears on the surface? How are we to judge of the reason that prompt certain action? How do we know the whys and wherefores that are in incentive to works and the ways that on the surface appear erratic and nonsensical?

The charity of thought is needed beyond all else. We may give of our abundance liberally, but if we withhold the generous thought that looks only for the best we are devoid of the principal that is prime mover in the world's existence. Women are less chartiable than men, particularly toward their own sex. If a woman needs sympathy, she does not appeal to a feminine judge. Experience has taught us that nothing is so harsh as a good woman.

And yet, after all, is this woman, the censor of others, so much above those whom she condemns? Is she the superior being, faultless and competent to judge? Ah, no! no one is free from some taint of sin. Humanity is weak even in its most perfect form, and even though we may go about feeling ourselves very high and mighty, one day there will be a great fall that will prove to us that we are as fallible as those whom we have regarded as weak and foolish.

Circumstances govern us all. We never know actually what we would do until we are placed in a similar position. Therefore do let us be kind; let us govern our tongues if not our thoughts, and in this way save a world of trouble to others and twinges of conscience for ourselves.—Philadelphia Times.

TIT FOR TAT.—When the good ship Petrel was on her last voyage the mate was appointed to keep the log. One day, however, he indulged rather too freely in the forbidden cup and was unable to attend to his duties.

The next day, quite late, after his head was once more able to hold his cap, he decided to write up the log. Turning to the page of the day before he was surprised to find this entry:

"Mate drunk all day."

"Here," he said to the captain, "I—I—w—wouldn't put that in, would you? It isn't necessary."

"Why not?" replied the captain. "It's true, isn't it?"

"Yes, it's true, I suppose."

"Well, then, I guess it had better stand."

So the mate resumed the log and began writing it on for that day.

When night came the captain, as usual, glanced over the record. It was his turn to be surprised, for, standing out in large black letters were the words: "Captain sober all day."

"Here, Mr. Mate," he called out, "come here. What do you mean by this, you fool? Why, anybody would think it quite unusual for me to be sober. What do you mean, sir?"

"Can't help that," responded the mate; "it's true, isn't it?"

"Yes, it's true, I suppose."

"Well, then, I guess it had better stand."—Boston Budget.

PLAIN TALK TO HIS LORDSHIP.—A venerable and pompous English Bishop was having his portrait painted by an eminent artist. After sitting steady for an hour in silence the churchman thought he would break the monotony with a remark:

"How are you getting along?" he inquired.

To the astonishment of the Bishop the knight of the palate, absorbed in his work, replied:

"Move your head a little to the right and shut your mouth."

Not being accustomed to such a form of address his lordship said:

"May I ask why you address me in this manner?"

The artist, still absorbed in his work, said: "I want to take off a little of your cheek."

The Bishop collapsed.

PALMER NEWS.

THE BOSTON AND ALBANY INDICTED

For the Death of Everett Sedgwick of Palmer in the Chester Accident last August.

The grand jury which reported at Springfield Wednesday brought in an indictment against the Boston and Albany railroad for the death of Frank E. Sedgwick of Palmer, better known as Everett Sedgwick, in the accident at Chester last August. This is only a technical proceeding, however, and is simply a preliminary to recover damages for his death. The law provides that the administrator may ask for an indictment if negligence or carelessness can be shown, or bring an action in tort. The first method of procedure is rarely followed, although if the indictment is sustained damages may be recovered up to $5000, according to the capability of the railroad. In this case the indictment was probably asked because Sedgwick traveled on a season ticket, containing conditions holding the company free from liability in case of injury. This would make recovery doubtful in an action of tort, but the supreme court has decided that "No condition printed on a season ticket can have the effect of relieving a railroad corporation from its liability to indictment under this section" (section 212, chapter 112). The indictment was brought at the request of the administratrix. It is necessary to prove carelessness or negligence, but not criminal carelessness. It is customary after the indictment is found for the district attorney to leave the prosecution to the attorney engaged by the administratrix, which in this case is ex-Gov. Robinson.

Teacher's Meeting.

The meeting at the high school building on Wednesday was an extremely entertaining, interesting and profitable one. The conditions were of the best: a bright, vigorous atmosphere, a pleasant room, capable and effective speakers. The room was full all day, the Palmer, Warren and Monson teachers being present in force, some from Wales and Brimfield, and several superintendents from neighboring districts. Among those present were Miss Mary A. Pollard, superintendent of the Ludlow district, Superintendent Wheeler of the Agawam district, Supt. C. E. Stevens of West Springfield, Supt. Wheeler of the state primary school, and Miss Fowler, teacher of drawing at Spencer. The exercises began promptly at nine, and during the entire sessions of over five hours few teachers showed any weary or "bored" expression. The first exercise was a paper by Miss Wood of Monson on the power gained by the young pupil from joining phonics with the word and sentence method in teaching primary reading. Following this were two illustrative lessons, with small groups of children, led by Misses Loggie and Anderson of Monson. These showed the possibilities of the system in a thoroughly instructive manner. Mr. Edson was to have had two talks during the meeting, but he furnished a substitute in the place of Mr. C. R. Wells of Syracuse, N. Y., who gave two delightful talks on penmanship. Supt. Brodeur of Warren read an able paper on "History," pleading for its early introduction into the school course by stories and reading, that the pupils who leave school at an early age may acquire a touch of patriotism and some few facts of historical knowledge. Mr. N. T. Bailey, state supervisor of drawing, gave two practical talks on uniting drawing with nature work, history and geography, always as a means of expressing an idea in the pupil's mind. Supt. Danforth of Westfield gave the final talk on geography. His points were: Study of nature first, expression of observed facts in symbolic form as a means of reading map symbols later, a study of the globe as the earth's type, its division into land and water, hemispheres, and the proper method of studying the land hemisphere. Mr. Edson characterized it as one of the brightest and best meetings he ever attended. Supt. and Mrs. Small entertained the speakers at dinner.

All the "Magic Citys" Here.

The JOURNAL has made arrangements to present the last three numbers of the "Magic City" series this week, and for one coupon, instead of compelling readers to wait two weeks more and clip two extra coupons, and parts 16, 17 and 18 can be had at this office. The series has been extended to 18 numbers instead of the original 16, in order to present something of the great Mid-Winter Fair at San Francisco, and some excellent views of it are shown. The complete series makes a book which is an ornament to any table, as well as a reminder of the wonderful buildings and scenes of the famous World's Fair at Chicago. It is well worth preserving, and binders for the series, in which the numbers can be fastened by any person, can be secured at this office for 50 and 75 cents each, the former in fine silk cloth and the latter in imitation morocco, elegantly lettered in gold. For those who wish a more substantial binding we have arranged to have the volumes bound for $1.25 in cloth, giving a choice of two styles, or $2 in half morocco, each handsomely lettered; samples can be seen at the JOURNAL office. Back parts will be supplied at the uniform rate of ten cents each, no coupon being required. Those who have not taken the numbers as they have been issued, but who wish to get the complete book now, can secure it in the cloth binding for $3, and in the half morocco for $3.75. Orders should be sent in as soon as possible, as the series will not be handled much longer.

An adjourned meeting of the Young Men's Library Association was held Tuesday evening, at which the president, Dr. W. H. Stowe, and the librarian, O. P. Allen, resigned. Both have held their offices several years, and it was with regret that their resignations were accepted, after a vain attempt to induce them to reconsider their action. A unanimous vote of thanks was given each for his services in the past. The vacancies will be filled by the board of directors.

The fruit dealers of the several villages have a grievance against the peddlers who come in with teams from other places, principally Springfield and Holyoke, with fruit which must be disposed of at once to avoid loss, and who sell at almost any price, bananas going even as low as five cents a dozen for good fruit. This of course knocks out the business of the local dealers, who have rent to pay, while the other fellow lives at home and keeps his horse in the cellar, possibly; but the law does not touch this class of peddlers, and the local dealers have to swallow the dose with as good grace as possible.

D. F. Holden has been ordered by the Wrights of Worcester to move the machinery of the Betts Fencing Company from their building at the wire mill by the first of June. No fault is found with the fencing company, but the Wrights say they can use it to better advantage for themselves. There has been for some time a rumor that the Wrights would conduct a part of their prosperous business in the building which they own here, manufacturing a new kind of wire, and it is hoped that this notification to the fencing company to vacate may be preliminary to the operation of the works by the Messrs. Wright.

The more one rides over the roads of the town and sees the work done by the road scraper, the more firmly does he become convinced that there is something rotten in the method of repairing the highways, and that in many cases the money paid for hauling the scraper would be of greater utility if it were paid for keeping that machine away from the roads altogether. And then the material which is hauled upon the roads as filling is in too many instances worse than useless, and only adds more sand to an already hard road for horses. In one place those in charge of the repairs have dug a hole several feet deep close to the roadbed in order to get a poor quality of filling, and then built a railing to keep travelers out of the hole.

The officers of the People's Church of Christ, which was organized two weeks ago, are: Clerk, A. S. Campbell; secretary, Mrs. M. A. Bull; treasurer, Mrs. A. S. Campbell; secretary, Mrs. M. A. Bull; treasurer, Mrs. A. S. Campbell; deacons, Hiram M. Palmer, A. S. Campbell; trustees, Hiram M. Palmer, William Rhodes, G. W. Camp, W. J. Smith, A. S. Campbell, J. Mason Wells, W. F. Tracy; organist, Mrs. A. S. Campbell; janitor, R. Forest Burr. The officers of the Sunday school are: Superintendent, A. S. Campbell; assistant, Mrs. E. B. Spaulding; secretary, Miss Anna Spaulding; treasurer, Frank Tracy; librarian, Herbert E. Rhodes; organist, Frank Tracy.

It is fair to presume that when the town voted to allow the Palmer Water Company to dig up the streets for the purpose of laying its pipes, with the proviso that the streets be left in as good condition as found, it meant just what such a vote would imply, and the attention of the selectmen might well be given to several places where pipes have been laid and which are left in an unsightly, if not dangerous condition, with a large ridge of soft earth at one side of the street. Another point: Why should the Palmer Water Company, after filling a ditch, leave the stones which are raked out by the side of the street to be carried off by the men and teams employed in repairing the highway? If the streets are left in the condition in which found certainly the town ought not to be to the expense of carting these stones.

Judge Robinson finished the inquest on the death of the Polander Raychel, at Thorndike, last Saturday, and finds that no blame can be attached to any employe of the railroad. Raychel and three companions, all musicians, had been at Bondsville Saturday night playing at a Polish wedding, at which there was more or less beer consumed, followed by more on Sunday. In the afternoon the party started to walk to Palmer to take the train for Springfield, and when at the upper crossing in Thorndike Raychel, who with one other had fallen behind, remarked that he would hurry up and join the others, who had crossed the track. He started after them and stepped on the track directly in front of the locomotive, apparently not seeing it. Just before it struck him he seemed to realize his danger and sprang forward, but too late to escape.

Miss Bertha Eastman, daughter of J. P. Eastman, was quietly married at the home of her parents Wednesday afternoon to George W. Cross of North Brookfield, Rev. H. F. Moulton performing the ceremony in the presence of about 20 relatives and intimate friends. The rooms were decorated with cut flowers and potted plants, and the couple stood in front of a bank of potted plants and flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Cross left on the 3.14 train for Worcester, and will be at home at North Brookfield next week. There were many presents from friends, among them being a handsome silver nut dish from the Natural History Society, of which both were members, silver knives, forks and spoons, dinner and tea set, China, and table linen, with many other articles, mainly of a useful rather than ornamental nature. One particularly valuable gift from the mother of the groom was a string of gold beads which originally belonged to her mother, and which are probably nearly 75 years old.

Charles Murdock has been busy this week supplying his customers with plants for their flower gardens. Mr Murdock gets his plants from the greenhouses of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, and has a large variety to select from. His collection of pansies is the finest seen this season, and comprises all the newest varieties.

Dr. Boulay arrived in town Tuesday evening with his bride, and was pleasantly surprised by his numerous friends and members of the band. Later all were invited inside, where the band gave several selections, and there were also solos by Will Heron and Joe Sweet. Refreshments were served. Mrs. Boulay, who, by the way, possesses a voice of fine tone and well cultivated, then entertained the party. After a pleasant evening the company dispersed, wishing the jovial doctor and his talented wife may years of wedded bliss.

Several families are unduly nervous over a case of scarlet fever which appeared in the family of F. A. Ruggles. Last week the children in one or two families were quite sick and showed symptoms of the same disease, but the doctors said it was not scarlet fever. Friday Knox Ruggles was taken sick, apparently with the same symptoms the others had. Saturday he grew worse, and Monday Mr. Ruggles decided not to send his other children to school until he was certain his boy did not have a contagious disease. Monday night his symptoms were unmistakable, and a notice was immediately posted warning all persons to that effect. The question now arrives, where could he have contracted the disease? As none of the Ruggles children have been at school since Knox was taken sick, no one has been exposed, and it is hoped that no other child has contracted the disease.

The funeral services of the late E. G. Murdock were held at the house Sunday at 2 o'clock. Having lived in town since nine years old, with the exception of a year or more, he was well known, and a large number of friends were present. Mr. Murdock had passed through severe sorrow in the death of his wife last August, with whom he had shared the joys and sorrows of many years. They pleasantly celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their married life but a short time before her death. Since that time, endeavoring to look at the bright side of life, he had continued his business at the store until heart trouble, resulting from an attack of the grippe a few weeks ago, confined him to the house, where he died the 3d of this month, 75 years of age. He has held many offices of trust in town, several years serving as selectman, and also as justice of the peace. In 1855 he was sent as representative from this district. Two brothers, a sister, a son and two daughters, with their families, survive him. Many will miss a kind and genial friend.

The funeral service was held at the Congregational church on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, p. m., and was largely attended. The floral offerings were numerous and handsome. The interment took place in the family lot at the Four Corners. Mr. Hitchcock has the sympathy of a large circle of friends here.

WHAT IS MAL-NUTRITION?

Mal-nutrition means that the food you eat does not nourish you. The plain English of it is starvation.

Everybody who is thin suffers from mal-nutrition. Everybody who is getting thinner than they ought to be suffers from mal-nutrition.

Doctors have given it many learned names: Anæmia, Dyspepsia, Phthisis, Diabetes. It is all mal-nutrition.

To learn how to cure a disease we must first find out the cause of it. The cause of your food not nourishing you? What can it be that you do not digest it? And how can we possibly help you, if you cannot digest your food? By giving you food that is already digested.

Cod liver oil and other fatty food is often given to people who suffer from mal-nutrition. But it never does them any permanent good. The reason is plain. Fats and oils are the most indigestible of all foods. They cannot be pre-digested. You cannot help a tired horse by giving him more work to do. Nor a tired stomach, either.

If your stomach cannot nourish your body with ordinary food, you must take food that will nourish it in spite of your stomach. PASKOLA is such a food.

If PASKOLA were a fatty food it would be no better than cod liver oil. PASKOLA is a starch food. It is possible to pre-digest starch food. PASKOLA is pre-digested. PASKOLA contains natural ferments that help to digest other food.

Of the three great classes of food, Starches, Albumens, Fats, only one has any effect in the diseases of mal-nutrition: THE STARCHES. If we want to get fat we must have starch food. If we suffer from mal-nutrition we must have PASKOLA.

PASKOLA is not a medicine, and does not contain any drugs. It is a pleasant natural food, prepared from richest grains and certain kinds of fruit. It has been prescribed by many eminent physicians, and is rapidly taking the place of drugs in all cases of mal-nutrition.

MONSON.

Shall Monson Have Fire Protection?

The consideration of a water supply for the inhabitants of Monson is to be acted upon next Thursday, and it should be carefully, candidly and deliberately investigated by all who care for the future welfare and best interests of the town. Monson has heretofore been providentially fortunate in case of fire; had high winds prevailed in the recent fires we have had it is doubtful if the town would, as it does now, present the appearance of which its citizens are justly proud, and which its many visitors charmingly admire. Thus far we have escaped the threatening destruction which has overtaken many places which have lost the entire central portion of their business interest, but we have no guarantee of the future, and if we seek security from a possible calamity it is high time that action be taken, when supplies can be purchased at low figures, and our laboring men are anxious and waiting for work. Although our woolen mill owners have taken the wise course and secured for themselves tanks, pumps and necessary supplies for protecting their mills, yet the other business interests, the churches, stores and private dwellings are wholly at the mercy of the ever-devouring Fire Fiend. As a conservative people we have not boomed as in many localities, but have gradually prospered and steadily gained in business and population, and it is vital to the future of our town that we "hold fast to those things we now have, lest at any time we let them slip. At the recent burning of Central Block the devouring elements seemed persistently intent on swallowing up the Heimann & Lichten straw works, which but for the heroic efforts of the firemen, assisted by willing and interested citizens, would to-day be a mass of charred timbers and a blackened monument to the tardiness of our people in providing a water supply for our safety and security. Should such an industrial plant be destroyed it would matonally cripple business, deprive hundreds of their daily employment, and be a blow to the community which it would take years to recover from, with the chances against its ever being rebuilt. We now have the problem before us to secure and keep if possible what industries we have by slow growth attained, or by inaction and neglect take chances greatly against us of going backward, with a possible greatly retarded growth. The question to be decided is, "Shall Monson continue to progress with the times and provide itself with that which is deemed by other towns a necessity and a protection, or shall we sit calmly, idly still and await the fate which may be in store for us?" There may be some who think water protection for a village would be of no benefit to those not in the immediate locality, but a common interest attaches to all our citizens, and the producer who finds a near and ready market for his produce should—and most of them do—appreciate the benefits resulting therefrom. One farmer recently said in speaking of this matter, "Why, if it wan't for the village customers my farm would not be worth one-half it is now," and he looked upon it in a sensible, unselfish manner, for every tithe of prosperity attained in the villages is felt and appreciated (or should be) by all its inhabitants. How often we read of the destruction of the entire business portion of a town, its mills, its churches, business blocks and private residences, and the almost stereotyped line, "they had no facilities for putting out fire." In such cases it is generally noticed that after a serious conflagration the people are lavish to a burdensome extent, and vote indiscriminate sums for almost indefinite water works, steamers, etc., and thus in the excitement of their heavy losses appropriate more than is really beneficial or justifiable. It is to be hoped that our citizens will take no action other than progressive, but such action as will help us to feel that security which comes from having done all we could to avert danger, and to help protect our business interests, our homes and our firesides.

Andrew J. Robbins had six bags of phosphate which he had intended to use as fertilizer on his farm. He is short six bags of fertilizer. Some fertile brain conceived the idea of robbing Mr. Robbins, and successfully carried off the six bags aforesaid. This is the first intimation the public have had that a fertil-izer thief was in our locality. The tracks plainly showed which way the thief wended his way, and it is amusing to see how he appears when in conversation with people who know how he has invested in the fertilizer business. The whole town knows the man and laughs, but the thief goes his way rejoicing in his stolen gains.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

For the Multitude.

Many great blessings of the world can only be had by the few, but here is one for the benefit of all, and absolutely free of charge. Nothing is of more importance to us than our health. It has, until recently, been impossible for the poor, or those living far from large cities, to obtain the best medical advice except at great expense. But now comes forward one of our greatest and most successful specialists in curing nervous and chronic diseases and offers to every one, far and near, the privilege of consulting him by letter, without charge. This is none other than the well known Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the discoverer of that wonderful medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

You who have sought in vain to learn what you are suffering from, or to obtain help, write him a description of your complaint, and he will return you a letter stating exactly what your disease is, and thoroughly describing each symptom, so that you can clearly understand just what ails you. And all this is entirely free of expense to you. The doctor gives most careful and explicit attention to all letters, and is having wonderful success in treating disease through his system of letter correspondence, using as he does, nothing but harmless vegetable remedies in his practice. Write the doctor at once all about your complaint. It is the surest way to regain your health.

Fruit culture is more profitable to the farmer now than his other crops. Brown Bros. Co., the most extensive nursery house in the United States, have a vacancy in this section. Write them at Rochester, N. Y., for their terms.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May, 1894.

We give up one hundred and seventy-five feet of counter space to the display and sale of waists, wrappers and tea gowns. A great space for Springfield; but we couldn't do with less—the stock is so varied, the assortments so complete.

It is a great stock, comprising all the leading styles of the best manufacturers. Strange, indeed, if everyone cannot find something to suit among the vagaries of this collection. The prices are lower than such goods ever sold for before. Here's a few illustrations taken at random from the stock:

At 25 cents—Women's Gingham waist, plaited back and front, full sleeves; sizes 32 and 34 only.

At 25 cents—Woman's laundered waist, blues, pinks and fancies.

At 50 cents—Woman's striped gingham waist, plaited back and front, full sleeves.

At 50 cents—Women's fancy printed cloth waist, Jabot front, full sleeves, plaited.

At 58 cents—Women's black and blue sateen with spots and stripes, worth $1.

At 75 cents—Women's best print waist, circular frilled yoke, trimmed with white braid.

Main floor of Pynchon street building.

Another lot of Scotch ginghams at 15 cents. The great cutting of the last few days has badly eaten into the assortment—many of the best styles are gone. Every sold-out pattern replaced and many new ones added. Scissors will flash once more, and the best styles will go just as quickly.

Right aisle.

Boys' strictly all wool $5 suits at $1.50. Light and dark mixtures and plain goods. Made good fitting and good style. Just the thing for school or knock-about suit.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

Spring.

Spring, gentle spring, is here at last,
The snow has gone away.
No more we feel the winter's blast—
The spring has come to stay.

The small boy, with his heart a-thump,
Determination grim,
Into the river takes a jump
And has his first spring swim.

The clerk, with figures in a row,
Now counts his meager hoard,
And wonders where he'd better go
For two weeks' country board.

And every married man is sad
To think that he is broke,
Because his darling wife has had
To buy that new spring cloak.

THE JEWEL OF HIS OFFICE.—Here is a story of a young man which is credited to a Chicago divine: The night he took the "third" the senior warden, at the proper time, gave him the "jewel." Then the worshipful master, with stately tread and solemn face, came down from his seat in the east, and approaching the young candidate said: "My brother, what is the jewel of your office?"

The young man blushed, and in a hesitating manner stammered out: "The typewriter."

The face of the worshipful master relaxed into a smile, and he said: "Well, that is not exactly the answer I expected, but as you have alluded to typewriters, let me ask you which one you prefer?"

There was no hesitation on the part of the candidate this time. With a happy look he answered eagerly: "Oh, the blonde."—Masonic Chronicle.

EN ROUTE THROUGH NEW MEXICO.

Dear Editor:—For a train steaming along night and day to be two days crossing the mountains suggests something of their magnitude. We really began to climb as soon as we left Kansas City, for the up grade is steady all through the state of Kansas, although not so perceptible till La Junta, Col., is reached. Soon the climbing begins in earnest, and in places the passengers get out and trot along in high glee while the two locomotives slowly drag the train up, up, around curves, and at last into a tunnel, where emerging we go speeding down grade for a while. This tunnel is 8000 feet above sea level, and is just at the state line between Colorado and New Mexico. As we wound around we followed the old Santa Fe trail, the oldest original trail, not only for Democrats of early days, but dating back to the dimmest days of Spanish history, and probably of time immemorial. Once upon this high level we hold it, with varying descent and ascent, till we have passed over four high levels, each from seven to eight thousand feet above the sea level, and at no time below five thousand. These high points, which are really passes, are at the state line tunnel already noted, then at Glorietta, New Mexico, we have just crossed the third at Coolidge, and the fourth is at Flagstaff, Arizona. Since leaving the Colorado cattle ranches we have been at this altitude where the country is barren of anything worthy of being called vegetation. And so cold is it that we are sitting to-day with overcoats on in the cars, with snow on the ground, and driving in the cold mountain wind. To be dreaming of Lower California, and day after day running through this bleak and barren mountain waste seems like hoping against hope. But the compensations of nature are wonderful. What nature cannot do with lavish display of vegetation she can do with vulcan strength and architectural skill. All day the panoramic views of the rocks have been enough to excite the dullest mind. At one time we have run for miles and miles beside black lava beds. Then on the other side began the most marvelous cliffs and castles, of red sandstone, bright brick red. They seemed almost endless, and the artist would have revelled in the beautiful contrast of patches of snow, dark cedar foliage, with the broad face of bright red showing everywhere.

It seems as if the panoramic variations of the rocks along this road, while perhaps not so collossal as on the Denver and Rio Grande, yet, for coloring and variety of shapes must be equal to the best. Such palisades, such pinnacles and towers of every castleated form, such terraces and architectural fronts, with arches, caves and every novel shape. And if these exhaustless rocks were near any market orders might be given for any color that is desired. But the grandeur of this handiwork of nature has its contrast in the type of humanity which lurks in its vicinity. We began yesterday to get touches of Mexican life. To-day the picturesque Pueblo Indians have shown us how they live, and in their typical dress came to the train to sell their pottery. Then we came to the Navajo country, and saw pretty nearly the Indian as he is, with a dark soul under his dark skin, and ten cents' worth of rags under his red blanket. At Coolidge we got a good dinner and ran into the trader's store to see where the Navajos buy their blankets and powder. All along the map marks the towns, but most of them consist of a few adobe huts. Of course Las Vegas and Alberquerque are places of some size, half American and half Mexican. To-night before dark we shall cross the last height at Flagstaff, and when we wake to-morrow morning shall find ourselves well down on the descending grade towards sea level, where it is to be hoped that at least the cactus and yucca will reappear to show that we are coming back to life. All along this high and drear waste there are more bleaching bones than live cattle. But it is a good high-way to California, and most of the way the railroad must have cost but little in building. But ah, even since civilization has supplied his luxurious mode of travel, the trail of death takes another form, as witnessed by the black bottles thrown out of the windows. There it is in black and white, in connecting links, bleaching bones and black bottles. W. T. H.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make his extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's new discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular price 50c. and $1.00.

CHARLES E. LYNCH.

TOURNAMENT

Of Ye Clothiers
Of Springfield.

A TRUE TALE.

Come listen, all ye people, to the wonders that befell,
At the tournament of Clothiers—a true story that I tell.
It is like the knightly wonders, that occurred in battles won
By the great and noble Launcelot in the tales of Tennyson.
It's up to date in time and place, and sure to interest;
It tells how sturdy CHARLES E. LYNCH in combat got the best
Of all the competition that is known the country round.
It makes a most dramatic tale—none better can be found.

The combatants came early—they were eager for the fray,
And they rode all sorts of horses, never seen until that day.
The champion rode a mustang, that could kick and break a rock,
And the legend on his blanket read, "You bet we own our stock."
Another rode a prancing steed and seemed to cut a swell,
And turning showed his name to be, "We make the clothes we sell."
Another rode a raw-boned horse, stone-blind in both his eyes,
And boasted the eccentric name, "We never advertise."
Came doleful-visaged "Bankrupt Stock"—so sleepy that he snores,
And one who bore the banner—"We own twenty-seven stores."
And other minor knights were there in quaint or bright array,
All hoping that Dame Fortune coy might cast her smiles their way.
But here's a youngster in the throng, a lad whom no one knows,
On a blooded horse—"Promoter of Fine Fashionable Clothes."
They eager press close to him; the Knights around him flock,
And read upon his blazing shield the magic words, "STEIN BLOCH."
Fine clothes, fine cut, fine styles, fine fits, were weapons in his hand,
With that honest reputation so well known throughout the land.
And then the people understood as clear as light of day
That the greatest living forces would wrestle in that fray.
The crowd set up a mighty cheer and swelled it long and loud.
The other knights were jealous—LYNCH uncovered to the crowd.
The trumpets blew a mighty blast, which told them all that they Would quickly see the fight for "Ready-made" Supremacy.

There was hurrying, there was scurrying, there was clash of brass and steel,
Horses stumbled, men were humbled, as from off their steeds they reel.
Hours the rough and tumble lasted, and the mud and feathers flew,
Till the steam from off the horses hid the gory scene from view.
But at last the fight grew feeble, and to everyone's surprise,
LYNCH walked alone upon the field with victory in his eyes.
The multitude went crazy wild, it yelled with sheer delight.
As the gracious PUBLIC crowned with laurels wreath the victor knight.

Now to the hero daily flocks the crowds, for well it knows
That none can equal or surpass CHARLES LYNCH'S modish clothes.
And mothers teach their children, as the grow up inch by inch,
To buy their clothes and furnishings from stylish

HENRY OWEN'S STORY.

A FULL ACCOUNT OF THE SUFFERINGS AND RESTORATION OF MR. AND MRS. HENRY C. OWEN RELATED TO A BLADE REPRESENTATIVE.

Most Excruciating Pain Endured—Physicians Helpless—A Remarkable and Interesting Narrative.

[FROM THE TOLEDO, O., BLADE.]

During the past few months there have appeared in the newspapers of the country, accounts of marvelous cures from the use of a medicine discovered by Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., and known as Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy.

These cases, many of them held by the medical profession as incurable, have been so frequently discussed in the newspapers, that it has led to many people using this preparation, and they invariably have had a similar statement to make. Many of these people have been told by their attending physician that "there was no hope," "recovery was impossible," and a little later was announced their restoration to health and strength through the use of Favorite Remedy. Recently the following letter from a well known citizen of East Toledo, attracted the attention of the Blade:

"No. 428 Euclid Ave., East Toledo, Dr. David Kennedy, Dear Sir:—I feel it a duty to write you of the benefit your medicine, Favorite Remedy, has been to my wife and myself. I suffered for years with kidney trouble, complicated with gravel in the bladder, and gall stones; at times I endured the most excruciating pain, so bad that I would have to be carried home from my business. My physician did not help me in the least; I kept growing worse. Finally Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was brought to my notice, and I used it regularly, following the suggestions found in a book wrapped about the bottle, and in a short time after that I was a well man; have never felt a return of the old troubles since.

My wife, who had been a sufferer from sickness peculiar to her sex, found no relief from any medicine she had ever used, until she began the use of Favorite Remedy, and that cured her. I haven't language to express the high esteem in which we hold Favorite Remedy; I have recommended it to dozens of people about here, and in no instance has it failed to benefit and cure.

Yours truly, HENRY C. OWEN."

The above letter was so remarkable as to be worthy of the fullest investigation, and the Blade determined to place the facts before the public for the benefit of other sufferers, and if unfounded, to let their readers know it. With these instructions a reporter was sent to the residence of Mr. Owen. In response to a ring of the door-bell, a lady appeared who proved to be Mrs. Owen. When your reporter made his mission known Mrs. Owen said she would gladly tell him about the good Favorite Remedy had been to their family. "For years Mr. Owen had been the victim of gall stones, complicated with kidney trouble and gravel in the bladder," said Mrs. Owen. "In spite of the efforts of physicians he did not improve in the least. I, too, had suffered for years with sickness peculiar to women, and one day I clipped from a newspaper an article referring to Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I told my husband that I thought it would help my trouble, and we immediately bought a bottle. I did not take many bottles before I noticed improvement, and then I suggested to my husband to try the remedy for his sickness.

"He did so, and felt the effects almost like magic. Mr. Owen continued to use Favorite Remedy until he has become permanently cured." Before going into further detail, it might be well to give in Mr. Owen's own words, a statement as to what it did for him. Mr. Owen, who is a man of about 42 years of age, with hair tinged with gray, was found at work as forman for the Chesbrough Bros.' Lumber Company, and in response to an inquiry as to the merits of Favorite Remedy and the genuineness of the letter published, Mr. Owen said: "I have not language to express the high esteem in which I hold Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I suffered for years with kidney trouble and gall stones; at times I endured pains which seemed almost unbearable. I used various prescriptions, and like everyone who is sick, took everything that my friends suggested. At last my wife told me of the good Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy had done her, and I concluded to try it. I used it and it cured me, and there is no mistake about that. I can refer you to many of our neighbors who have used it with the same results. One young man, a friend of mine, had been sick for months, and was doctoring with one of these $5 a week physicians. They did him no good, and I told him about Favorite Remedy. He had paid for a week's treatment, but left them and followed my directions. I saw him some days afterwards and he was feeling better and thanked me for my advice."

"Mrs. Owen has a similar story to relate. No human tongue can tell how she suffered, until she commenced to use Favorite Remedy. She had doctored with several physicians, and was about to give up in despair when this came to her relief. I am confident that if she had not taken Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy she would have been in her grave to-day."

Mr. Owen has lived in Toledo, and has been the head man at Chesbrough Bros. for years, and is prominently connected with the East Side M. E. Church. In communicating to the reporter in reference to his trouble, Mr. Owen said further that the pain he had was of a boaring, burning, lacerating character, and radiated through his abdomen and chest. He complained, when ill, of intense nausea accompanying the pain at first, the food being thrown up, but presently, after repeated retching, only some mucus acid and watery matter were expelled from his stomach. The action of the heart was feeble, and the circulation was correspondingly depressed. The duration of the seizure varied from a few hours to several days. "I am now," said Mr. Owen, "a perfectly well man; if it had not been for Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy I don't know what the present condition of Mrs. Owen and myself would have been."

Mr. and Mrs. Owen's friends and neighbors confirm the accounts of their sickness and their remarkable recovery, and it was also found that there were many other people in their vicinity who had been cured of various ailments by using Favorite Remedy. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is an unfailing specific for Bright's disease, kidney, liver and urinary complaints, rheumatism, gravel, stone in the bladder and sick-headache. It will cure the most obstinate case of constipation. In cases of neuralgia, or painful diseases, inflammation of the liver, dyspepsia, skin disease, jaundice, gastritis, loss of appetite, sleeplessness, nervousness or blood diseases, and female irregularities, it has cured where all else has failed.

The chief characteristics of Favorite Remedy is its agreeable quality and mild operation on the liver and bowels, absolute freedom from irritating cathartic action. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy can be purchased of any dealer in medicine at one dollar a bottle or six bottles for five dollars. A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and it never fails to cure when the directions are faithfully carried out.

Tears.

There be three hundred different ways and more
Of speaking, but of weeping only one;
And that one way, the wide world o'er and o'er,
Is known by all, tho' it is taught by none.
No man is master of this ancient lore,
And no man pupil. Every simpleton
Can weep as well as any sage. The man
Does it no better than the infant can.

The first thing all men learn is how to speak,
Yet understand they not each other's speech;
But tears and neither Latin nor yet Greek,
Nor prose nor verse. The language that they teach
Is universal. Cleopatra's cheek
They decked with pearls no richer than from each
Of earth's innumerable mourners fall
Unstudied, yet correctly classical.

Tears are the oldest and the commonest
Of all things upon earth; and yet how new
The tale each time told by them! How unblessed
Were life's hard way without their heavenly dew;
Joy borrows them from grief; Faith trembles lest
She lose them; even Hope herself smiles through
The rainbow they make round her as they fall;
And death, that cannot weep, sets weeping all.

—Robert, Earl of Lytton.

A FISHERMAN'S DAUGHTER.

There had been a fog in the early morning, but the sun, gathering strength, burst suddenly from behind a black and indigo cloud, and streaked the sea with a copperish hue. Far down the beach were two men and a boat. They were stalwart men, and the eldest was busy shaking from the meshes of a draw-net entangled tufts of maroon and brown seaweed.

"Poor draughts, Shelah," said the net-shaker, looking philosophically into the basket that held the fish.

"Poor enough, Master Reeks. Is it home now?"

"Ay, lad; home it is. Get in the boat, Shelah."

The young man jumped into the boat and took the oars; the other shoved off, and when he was knee-deep in the salt water, clambered in after him.

"Shelah," said Reeks, speaking of a sudden, "when are you going to marry my Jen?"

There came a little extra color into Shelah's smooth, tanned cheeks. 'I don't know, master," he said.

"Ah!" said Reeks, with a sigh, "I wish her mother was alive."

"Why, old Tom?" asked Shelah.

"Why? To cheer her, lad. I'm afeered my hand is a bit too heavy on the tiller for a dainty craft like my Jen. She want's a woman at her hellum,—or a husban'."

"What makes you say that?" asked Shelah, resting on his oars.

"I'll tell ye, lad," he said slowly. "It's been on my mind a long time; an' now I'll tell ye. I don't like the comin's an' goin's of that young brewer o' our'n, Mr. Cyril Rivington.

"Now, in my father's time, an' in my time the old 'ship' might ha' tumbled about our ears for all the brewer cared or troubled. But since this here young chap ha' come from abroad, an' his father ha' taken him into partnership, things ha' altered. Nigh on every day he's a-ridin' up to know if we want anything done. 'Is the beer all right?' 'Are there any repairs needed?' an' all that. I shouldn't care how many times he come, Shelah, if it warn't for Jen. I'm afreed that his fine hoss an' his velvet coat, an' his leggins an' watch-chain may dazzle her, lad. It's precious little company we see at the 'ship,' an' it may make her dissatisfied with the life she's leadin'."

"Jen is all right," said Shelah, firmly.

"So she is, my lad; but she'd be a lot better married. An' so between man an' man, my lad, I wants to know when you are goin' to marry her?"

"I'd marry her to-morrow," said Shelah, wistfully, "if she'd ha' me, master."

Reeks looked at him steadily for a moment. "Shelah Baxter," he said solemnly, "you put me in mind of that song the Scotch packman was singin' in the 'Ship' the tother night. You sit on a stule an' look life a fule, with your hold jaws nearly shaven. You ain't got the pluck of a mouse."

Shelah looked dreamily at the purple-feathered arrows and silvery spear-tipped shafts of cloud over the sea, but gave no contradiction.

"Wi' wimen, I mean," pursued Reeks. "There ain't a man in the whole village, Shelah, that could put you on your back. But wi' women!' he snorted. "Why, man alive, the bolder you are with a women, the better she likes ye. See how they run after a soger's coat. Now I ha' got a bit and you ha' got a boat of your own, and what's to prevent you two a settlin' down together? Pluck up, Shelah, says I, ha' no more shilly-shallyin'."

"I'll think on it," said Shelah, slowly.

"Do," said Reeks, refilling his pipe. "But to act upon it wouldn't it be better."

Shelah's suspended oars fell splash into the sea, and for a moment the boat seem'd to raise up and fly bodily over the top of a wave, so hard did he pull.

"Master," he said deliberately, "can you read writin'?"

"No," said Reeks, "I can't. Why?"

"Because, if you could, I wanted you to read this." He held a sheet of pink note-paper. It was soiled with fish scales and tobacco dust, but even now retained a sweet and subtle perfume.

Reeks took it gingerly, held it in three different ways and narrowly scanned it. "All I can make out, lad," he said, "is these here.

"What are they?" cried Shelah, eagerly.

"Kisses!" said Reeks, solemnly—"ten on 'em."

"Kisses?" repeated Shelah, vacantly. In sudden fury he snatched the paper, and, doubling it in a ball, threw it far over the waves. Opposite the lookout, Shelah rowed ashore.

"Now," said Reeks, as he jumped out, 'I'll, stow away, lad. Go you up to the 'Ship.' It's about time you an' Jen came to an on-derstanding'. Pluck up, Shelah, and remember there's allus ways an' means of winnin' a woman." He winked and nodded.

Shelah drew his feet out of the wet sand and with a sad smile moved up the beach. As he strode between the lifeboat and the yawl his face settled into gloom. There was a big sandhill on his left; he turned aside and mounted it. "Ten kisses," he groaned, and looked vacantly around him.

He slowly descended the mound and walked toward the inn. The "Ships" sign could be seen long before the inn. Within a few paces of the sign Shelah halted. He could hear a horse's hoofs pawing the ground. He was soon regaled with a little whistling, then the softly hummed verse of a song. The words came to his ears with aggravating clearness:—

You've all heard of Larry O'Toole.
Of the beautiful town of Drumgoole;
He had but one eye
To ogle ye by:
Och, murther, but that was a jew'll!
He made of the girls, this O'Toole.

There next sounded some loud laughter, a step on the tiled path of the inn, then the singer spoke. "I drink your health, my charmer," he said, "in the Rivington brew." After that he spoke lower, but the words reached Shelah's ears: "You got my note, Jennie, but you never came. Why was that?"

"I was afraid. And, oh, what would father say if he knew that you sent me that note with all those—those—" The musical voice ended suddenly

"Kisses, Jennie," finished the horseman. "Well, I don't know. I don't particularly care. Love is altogether reckless. And for you, my gypsy, I would risk anything. Now tell me, Jennie, when can you meet me alone? It is a small favor for a lover to ask. When shall it be?"

Jennie was silent.

"Jennie," said the rider seriously, "do you love me?"

Holding his breath, Shelan waited for the answer. It was inaudible.

"Come a little closer, Jennie," said the horseman gayly; "kisses on paper are nothing to kisses in—"

"Hush!" cried Jennie; "some one is coming!"

It was Shelah. He rounded the corner in time to see Mr. Cyril Rivington riding away.

With his head bowed Shelah crossed the threshold of the inn door; he was met inside by a pretty, brown-checked girl, whose face had a heightened and rather unusual bloom. At sight of Shelah she looked disconcerted.

"Jen, lass," he said. "I want to speak to you; I want to ask you somethin'."

Jennie started, and there was a sensible diminution of the color in her cheeks. "Not now, Shelah," she said nervously. "I'm busy now. Wait till father comes in."

"No," said Shelah, "I cant wait. If I don's speak now, I shall never speak. I won't stop you long."

"Well, then," said Jennie, "say it quick.

What is it?" She seated herself with her face to the window and her foot nervously tapping the sanded floor.

"It's this," said Shelah, and his voice shook a little: "we ha' been sweetheartin' for a long time, and I want to know when we are going to get merried, Jen?"

"Never," she said softly.

"Never?" he repeated, huskily.

"I should only make you wretched. I want you to give me up, to forget me, Shelah."

"Give you up, Jen! Give you up, lass! Give up my life—ask me for that, Jen, but don't ask me to give you up, sweetheart, for I do so love you, my dear."

Jennie's lips quivered and her eyes began to fill with tears, but she kept her face to the window.

"It would break my heart to marry you," she said, "for I love some one else."

"You love some one else?" said Shelah, mechanically.

"Yes, and he is going to marry me. So you see, Shelah, it would be wrong for me to marry you. I should be always miserable and wretched, and I should make you miserable and wretched, too; so please, dear Shelah, let me go and—and forget me." She ended with a sob.

White and still sat Shelah; then heavily and wearily he rose. Jennie uncovered her face for a moment. At the sight of his she hid it again. "Forget you, lass," he said, "I never can." Moved perhaps by the thought of what might have been, he leaned down and gently pressed his lips to her forehead "But if giving you up, lass," he proceeded huskily, "will make you happy, Jen"—there was an agonizing ring in his voice—"why, I give you up."

When she looked around again he was gone.

All that night it froze hard, and the calm sea lay moaning like a dog on its chain. Shelah heard it as he stood in the lonely sentry-box of the lifeboat lookout. In the morning the frost-bowed blades of the sea-grass had changed the dunes into a great glistening bed of white coral.

As usual, Shelah called at the "Ship" for Tom Reeks. He had barely entered when he heard a horse's hoofs on the hard road, a horseman reined up at the inn and Shelah drew back into the shadow. "Shelah!" It was Jennie who spoke. She stood, white and trembling, on the cellar steps. "Will—will you take him this?"

Strangely fascinated at being called upon for such an act, Shelah took from her the measure of sparkling ale, and, like a man in a dream, carried it to the door. With his head down he walked up to the rider. A loud "Hem!" caused him to start and look up. Instead of the young brewer, he was facing the old one. The elder Rivington looking at the ale as a doctor might look at his own medicine. "No, my man," he said, "I don't care for anything so early as this. If you'll have the goodness to hold my horse while I dismount. Thank'ee. Tether him there—will you? I want to see the landlord. Is he in?"

Before Shelah could answer, Reeks gave evidence of his bodily presence by appearing at the doorway. The brewer walked in, followed by Shelah. Rivington, senior, was a pleasant, chatty old gentleman, and he soon disclosed the object of his visit.

A ball was going to be held at Herringbourne town hall, and he was distributing invitations to such of his tenants as chose to attend. As he was passing,—quite by accident, he assured them,—he felt he ought not to miss the landlord of the "Ship." There were the tickets, and he hoped that Reeks and his daughter would attend.

"I forgot to mention," he said, blandly, as Reeks, after expressing his thanks, took them up, "that this ball is to be held in honor of of my son Cyril's marriage. He is to be married this week to the daughter of a very old friend of mine,—a man of Kent."

As he finished, a low, sobbing cry startled all but Shelah. A beer-warmer had rattled to the floor, and Jennie stood vacantly staring into a little lake of the spilt liquor at his feet.

"Why, what's the matter, lass?" said Reeks, "you look as white as a ghost."

"Nothing, father," she answered, faintly; "nothing, only the heat of the fire."

"That is what it was," said old Rivington. "The heat of the fire, no doubt. I have experienced the same sensation my-self. Well, good-day, Reeks, I hope you will find it convenient to attend."

He nodded pleasantly, untethered his horse from the palings and mounted it. As he rode away he smiled softly and patted his horse's mane. Shelah Baxter came out of the "Ship" and walked aimlessly down to his boat. The surf was boiling on the Scroby, and great rollers with foaming crests were racing in and tumbling upon the sunlit beach. He stood a while absently watching the little salt fountains which their recoil left bubbling in the sand, then mounted the tall hillock to look for Reeks.

On the top he started and his tan cheeks grew pale. At the base of the mound by a dwarfed clump of furze sat a girl, sobbing violently. It was Jennie Reeks. He descended the side she was on and gently touched her shoulder. "You'll catch cold, lass," he said, sadly, "if you sit here."

Through her tear-brimmed eyes she looked into his face. Not a word of reproach. Only in his eyes was the love that had been so constant and true. With a little catching of her breath Jennie rose and drew back; then, with a convulsive cry, she flung her arms wildly around his neck, and there she sobbed until she could sob no more. When they went back to the "Ship" Reeks met them at the door. Something in their attitude made him softly whistle. A nearer view of their faces made him chuckle. It seemed as if Shelah had taken his advice and plucked up at last.—Chambers' Journal.

The May Queen up to Date.

You must wake and call me early, call me early, hubby dear,
To-morrow will be the liviest day that you will see this year;
To-morrow, of all the year, will be the maddest, smashingest day,
For we'll move the first of May, hubby, we'll move the first of May.

The hired girl has left us and you'll have to do her task;
I hope you won't get cross, but gladly do all I may ask.
At 4 a. m. we'll eat a lunch to do us for the day,
For we'll move the first of May, hubby, we'll move the first of May.

You'll have to take the carpets up and get the dishes packed;
You'll carry the mirrors in your lap and see they don't get cracked,
And hold the baby in your arms and ride on top the dray;
For we'll move the first of May, hubby, we'll move the first of May.

This house we're leaving suits us, but you know it isn't style
To live in one locality but just a little while;
The dreary flat we're going to costs us more than here we pay,
But we'll move the first of May, hubby, we'll move the first of May.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

WOMEN IN THE NEW YORK CITY MISSION.

A woman never appears to better advantage than when she ministers to the unfortunate, and when a woman gives her life to the work of elevating those who are cast down in body and soul, and does it for the sake of Christ, all unconscious of how she herself may appear, she challenges our greatest admiration. Such a woman is Miss Gregg, the New York city missionary, supported by the Wellesley College and Mount Holyoke College missionary societies. Miss Gregg is a woman not only beautiful in character, but she is a very pretty woman, slender, fair, with dark, earnest eyes that speak her soul's devotion.

The New York city mission is conducted by four undenominational churches, located in different parts of the down town section of the city. Miss Gregg is connected with the DeWitt Memorial church. These churches are supported and the expenses of their work are met by contributions from the churches of the different Protestant denominations and from other sources, private and public. The mission is under a superintendent, and has a male and a female department. Mrs. Brainsbridge is at the head of the women workers of the DeWitt Memorial church. She lays out the districts for each of the experienced workers, oversees the office work, the distribution of money, etc., and trains the missionary students? Under her direction in the mission house are a number of young women students, who are there for the purpose of preparing themselves for mission work. Some of them are fitting to be city missionaries, some to become foreign missionaries. Here they pursue certain studies important in their work, especially Bible studies. They attend courses of lectures, indeed follow a regular course of study prepared by experienced mission workers.

These girls also accompany the missionaries on their visits, help conduct meetings, etc., and thus have what might be called a normal training in mission work. They are thus able to find out to some extent before entering the missionary field whether they are adapted to such work and in what department they are most likely to be successful. The experienced workers labor independently, except as they have advice and assistance from the other mission workers. A missionary is assigned her district, and she is expected to become acquainted with as many of the people in her district as is possible, to visit them in their homes and to know their needs. Her aim and object is to carry the gospel of Christ to every soul, as one means. She carries also food and clothing when it seems necessary.

Last winter "The Lighthouse" was opened on Water street, one of the lowest parts of New York. This is much father down town than the Mission church, and the object was to hold meetings in this little room during the winter and to so interest the people as to draw them to attend the church. Mr. Luther, a Northfield man, and Miss Gregg held meetings at the "Lighthouse" every evening except one in the week all winter. They had of course assistance from other workers, preachers from the up town churches and others. They had a "Baby" organ and they sang songs and hymns and taught the people who came in to sing. There were from forty to fifty and sometimes as many as a hundred persons who attended these meetings, many of them regular attendants, and a large majority young men. Miss Gregg says, "I know they heard things they never knew before, I know they felt the truth of the lessons taught them, and I am sure there was seed sown that will spring up and bear fruit. These young men can never be what they were before."

At first as Miss Gregg went about the streets children, men and boys would call out: "Here goes the Lighthouse, Come in;" or "Here goes the lassie or Salvation Army." For about all these low down people know of the Protestant religion is what they have learned from the Salvation Army. At first men came into the meetings from curiosity or to make a disturbance, but the singing conquered them and soon they came because they liked to come. The missionaries had everything to contend with in the way of disturbances, but in one way or another succeeded in keeping order. Sometimes it was necessary to turn men out, and Miss Gregg tells of one time when the preacher collared two young roughs and forcibly expelled them, while one of the workers was going for an officer. This treatment proved the most effective possible under the circumstances, for the next time those young men came to meeting they behaved themselves. Besides these meetings there were Sunday schools for the children, King's Daughters and Sons societies, mother's meeting, etc., all conducted by the missionaries. Then there was visiting homes and personal work.

Each missionary keeps a diary in which she records every case that comes under her observation; thus by consulting these records she can trace the history of a person or a family in its upward career under the guidance of the missionary. And there are many such encouraging histories. First, the Lighthouse meeting, good books, the temperance pledge, the "drink" money used instead for the betterment of the home, church attendance; then a better home in better quarters, and so onward and upward to sobriety, social pleasure, pleasant homes, Christian living.

Little Frank had long importuned his father to buy him a pony. At last papa said, "If I were to get you a pony, Frank, you wouldn't know what to feed him." "Oh, yes, I would, papa," replied the boy. "I'd feed him horseradish."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

PALMER NEWS.

The Odd Fellows to Have a Home of Their Own.

At last the Palmer lodge of Odd Fellows is to have a home of its own, unless something unexpected should turn up. The lodge has moved from place to place during its existence, but now decides that it is time to go to housekeeping in its own property, and has bargained for the land belonging to the Feeney estate bounded by Central, Pleasant and Walnut streets, and will put up a building thereon. The land is about 75 feet on Walnut and Central streets by 185 on Pleasant, and the building will front on Central street. Although no drawings have yet been made, the general outline of the plan is to put up a handsome brick building about 60 by 108 feet, with an opera house on the ground floor and amply quarters for the lodge in the upper story. The opera house will be built to seat 700 on the floor, and will be constructed so that a balcony can be added if desired. The stage will be 40 feet wide by 25 deep, which will admit the use of the largest scenery carried by traveling companies, the largest stage in Springfield being only 44 feet wide and about the same depth as the one proposed here. There will be ample dressing rooms on each side, and every convenience. The lodge has about $4500 on hand, and will in a few years own the property clear of debt.

Judge Robinson attended Thursday a meeting at the Thorndike in Boston of the district deputies of the Royal Arcanum of Massachusetts. He has been appointed deputy for Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee Falls and Winchendon.

The drought has been so long continued and the soil has become so dry that it might not be a bad thing to discontinue work on the highways of the town until there is rain, or do only what is absolutely necessary. Soil which is disturbed now in the repairing of the roads will not pack again until rain comes, and only remains loose, making travel hard for horses and disagreeable for the occupants of the vehicles.

The selectmen have been asked to look into the matter of the method of opening graves in the Four Corners cemetery, the Four Corners Cemetery Association complaining that it is not done properly, and that much of the work done by them in beautifying and caring for the grounds is undone and ruined by the methods employed. This association is seeking to become incorporated, as it has opportunity to secure from $500 to $700 for a permanent fund by so doing.

W. F. Waite, who so successful managed the bicycle tournament last fall, is arranging for a celebration on the Fourth of July, which shall include races between a professional wheelman and a fast running horse, and races open to all bicyclists. In the morning there will be a band concert, with a grand parade of wheelmen and prizes for the club having the greatest number of men in line and the club coming the longest distance on wheel. A local road race will also be one of the attractions. In the afternoon the races will be one-half, mile, and two-mile dashes between P. J. Berlo of Boston, one of the fastest wheelmen of the east, and the famous running horse "Rugby," of Springfield. The open-to-all races will be one, two and three miles. Already entries are being made.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock of the fire department flushed the sewers Wednesday with water from the mains of the Palmer Water Company, and the appearance of the fluid as it came from the pipes was not calculated to strengthen the stomachs of sensitive persons who reflected that their drinking supply came from the same source. When the pipes were opened the water ran a rich coffee color, and in some cases it was several minutes before it became clear, the longest time elapsing when the hydrants in the residence portion were opened, or those attached to the smaller pipes. There being little occasion to draw heavily on the pipes, they naturally accumulate more or less sediment, and should be cleared out by opening the hydrants at least twice a year, early in the spring, and in the fall just before the ground freezes.

The condition of West Main street from the Point of Rocks to Shearer's Corner is severely criticised by horsemen and all who drive over it. The sods from the sides have been dug up and placed in the center, and not being covered the grass has sprung up until there is quite a crop of it, though it is not likely to get high enough to make good hay. If it only would the town might cut it and get back a part of the cost of "fixing" the road, and as no driver cares to stop and feed his horse the crop is likely to be a total loss as far as doing any one any good is concerned. No driver will put his horse over it on account of the roughness of the surface, and as a result the sides of the road, between these sods and the ditches, are fast becoming deeply rutted, and what was a passably good piece of road is getting to be shunned as much as possible.

Complaint is made of the condition of the sidewalks in front of Holden's new block, and where the peanut stand is located. At the former place at least half the sidewalk and a goodly piece of the highway is blocked with lumber and brick, making passing on the sidewalk rather close work. It would seem as though the lumber might be removed from the sidewalk if it is to be left open for pedestrians. At the peanut stand a portion of the outer edge of the sidewalk is often filled with agricultural implements and other merchandise on display, while on the inside the fruit and peanut stand kept by the Italian, which is supposed to be located between the two buildings, projects some four feet beyond the street line. Thus contracted on both sides, the passageway is at times hardly more than four or five feet wide, compelling pedestrians to crowd and jostle each other at that point.

In the district court last Saturday Willie Kerr and D. Wallenty of Thorndike were tried for the larceney of fishhooks and lines. Kerr was discharged, but Wallenty was found guilty and the case was continued until May 26th for trial. Elias Holmes, living near the crossing of the New London Northern track and the road to Three Rivers, was charged with illegal sales of liquor, and with maintaining a nuisance on the Lord's day. There were three courts for illegal selling, and he was found guilty on all, being fined a total of $250. He appealed, but afterward withdrew it and offered to pay the fine on the first count, $75, promising to quit selling. He was allowed to do this, and sentence in the other cases is suspended, to be brought up in event of his forgetting his promise. Holmes had been suspected of selling for some time, but on the 29th of April he sold eleven bottles of lager and some elderberry wine to four lads of from 17 to 19, and subsequent events brought out the facts, there being a dead open and shut case against him. On Monday Albert Gwnse of Thorndike paid $10 for drunkenness. H. A. Lombard, S. H. Ellery and F. P. White of Brimfield, with Robert Connor of Palmer, were charged with being drunk and disturbing the peace at Bondsville, and will have a hearing to-morrow. On Wednesday Louis O'Clare of Sturbridge paid $5 for being drunk.

Mr. Adams is arranging an interesting programme for Memorial Day exercises, to be given on the afternoon preceeding Memorial Day.

The lumber firm in Stafford Springs, Ct., which recently purchased from the Palmer Mill Co. the large wood lot on Baptist Hill, will commence in a few days to cut off the same.

Hectaire Grevelle, who injured his hand quite badly some time ago, is progressing finely. The doctor thinks now he can save his hand, and Mr. Grevelle will lose but one finger.

Mr. Aiden's twins were the subject of considerable anxiety again one day this week. They had wandered to the river bank and were returned to their home after several hours' search.

Rev. G. S. Butler is taking a much-needed rest, and has gone to Vermont. Rev. Hollis Jordon will supply the pulpit at the Union church during his absence, which is expected to extend over three Sundays.

The Palmer Mill Co. is building an addition to its dye house. The work has accumulated to such an extent in this department that the addition is necessary in which to place new machinery, recently purchased.

Mr. McInness of Amherst College, who supplied the pulpit of the Baptist church here for several months, has accepted a position as professor at a large seminary for young ladies in Florida. Mr. McInness graduates next month from Amherst, and will enter at once upon his new duties.

"Hindrances in the Way of Life," will be the subject for the lecture on Pilgrim's Progress next Sunday evening at the Baptist church. "Pliable" and "Obstinate" will be among the interesting characters produced. A large congregation was present last Sunday evening, and it is hoped that a larger number will be present next Sunday.

Several weeks ago the Watchman, a paper printed in the interests of the Baptists, printed a sermon written by Rev. B. A. Green of Lowell upon the subject "The Man side of Work." No text was given, and they offered a pocket edition of the Oxford Bible to the person who would send them the correct text used by Mr. Green. This week Rev. E. C. Weeks, pastor of the Baptist church in this village, received the Bible and a letter from the Watchman informing him that he had been successful and had sent the correct text, which was Prov. ii: 24–25.

Discoveries in Consumption.

WHAT DYSPEPSIA HAS TO DO WITH IT.

Old School and New School Methods.

It is, to say the least, peculiar, that all consumptives suffer from dyspepsia. Dyspeptics are not always consumptives, but they are quite likely to become so, if they don't cure their dyspepsia.

Dyspepsia is more like consumption than any other disease known. It is, in fact, one of the most fruitful causes of consumption. The dyspepsia in consumption is as dangerous as the lung trouble.

There are no drugs known that will cure the dyspepsia of consumption or enable patients to properly digest their food, and thus gain flesh, except Paskola, which is a Pre-Digested Food.

Starch, not fat, is the food for people who are losing weight. Taskola, not cod liver oil, is the modern treatment for consumption.

A starch food made of grains and fruit, predigested like Paskola, is the nearest approach to perfect food for dyspeptics that can be got. The starch in Paskola, being already digested, is absorbed almost as soon as it is swallowed. Its fruit ferments, which are the same as those in the stomach and pancras, act as powerful digestives of other food. The immediate nourishment given by Paskola is very refreshing and invigorating.

Mr. Charles M. LeFurge, of New York City, N. Y., says: "My wife has used several bottles of 'Paskola' with great benefit to herself—good appetite, general improvement in health—and not only considers it a boon, but everything you claim for it."

Write for descriptive pamphlets to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 39 Reade St., New York.

MONSON.

The First Move for Fire Protection.

Monson has evidently waked up at last to the fact that something must be done in the matter of providing fire protection, as evidenced by the vote at the special town meeting yesterday afternoon to see if the town would accept the provisions of the act recently passed by the Legislature permitting the town to supply itself with water. The vote stood 348 for to 42 against, the 42 being roundly hissed for their action.

The street for a long distance each side of the town hall reminded one of the usual appearance on circus day, being thickly lined with teams. There were many farmers present, and considerable opposition was expected from them. The ballot for moderator resulted in an almost unanimous vote for J. P. Herlihy, Jr. The report of the committee chosen in February to investigate the matter of water works was made by R. M. Reynolds, who stated that the committee had looked the proposed plans over and voted unanimously to recommend their adoption. The estimate, $66,000, was a liberal one, almost every item having been figured higher that it would probably cost, so as not to tell the voters one price and then have the works cost more. By a change in the price of pipe since the figures were made about $2500 could be saved on this item alone, and the cost would probably be $7000 or $8000 below the estimate given out. After the reading of the act by the town clerk G. H. Newton moved that the town accept the provisions of the act, and the motion was seconded by A. A. Gage. R. M. Reynolds was the first speaker, stating that the town was helpless in its present condition. Private enterprise had attempted the matter of water works but had given it up, and if they were provided at all it must be by the town. Should any of the present industries suffer from fire it was extremely doubtful if the works would be rebuilt, and that meant a serious loss to the town. The water it was proposed to furnish was of the purest, as shown by analysis, and the work could be done cheaply now, with materials low and labor plenty. There should be no selfishness in the matter, but all should work together for the best interests of the whole town.

A. A. Gage stated that the town was legislating now for a long time in the future. That while there was a time when burned industries would be rebuilt that time had passed. In this the farmers were interested. Supposing the hat shop should burn, how many would be thrown out of employment, and how much of a market would the farmer have for his butter, milk, eggs and farm produce? The town would be in the condition of Wales and other places similarly situated,—where when the mills stopped it affected every person in town. Could the town afford to be without fire protection? In regard to the cost of the works increasing taxes he stated that the $66,000 could be borrowed at 4½ per cent interest, and that with no income from the sinking fund or water rents this would cost only $4604 a year, or about $3 on each $1000 valuation. And of this increase the village would pay nearly all, for of the 13 school districts of the town there were 11 outside the village, and these 11 paid last year paid only $5000 of the taxes, while in these same districts the money spent for highways, teachers' salaries, fuel, janitors and school incidentals amounted to about $7000, and that in three of these districts the taxes did not pay the teachers' salaries into $100 each. The village has been helping the balance of the town for years, and now it should help the village. William Sutcliffe did not object to the water works, but it was the paying for them which came hard for the farmer, already taxed more in proportion to the value of his property than others of the town.

G. H. Newton favored the water works because they could be had on the installment plan, and what was for the best interests of the townspeople was for the benefit of the farmer, and what benefitted the farmer helped those in the village.

After a statement by E. F. Morris that the accepting of the provisions of the act did not carry with it the outlay of any money now, that it simply gave the town the right to provide water works if it desired, a few remarks from F. E. Morris regarding the insurance rates and the effect of no fire protection on their advancement, Mr. Heimann, of the Heimann & Lichten straw works, was called for and voted the privileges of the floor, stating that while the firm liked Monson and would prefer to stay now that it is here, if they should be burned out it was more than probable that they would go where they could have protection from fire.

Rev. F. S. Hatch was the last speaker, saying that what hurt one family in the town hurt all, and what was a benefit to one was a benefit to all. If the water works would be good for one they would be good for all. He advised all to vote on the principle of doing to others as you would have them do to you, asking the farmers to vote on this question as they would if they lived in the village and were asking the others to help them.

The result of the count was received with great applause, which showed how deeply the people feel the need of fire protection.

A committee consisting of E. F. Morris, G. H. Newton and A. D. Norcross was appointed to consider plans for issuing bonds or providing for the financial part of the proposed works, and report at the next meeting.

"The Woman Hater," which the Amherst College seniors will produce here on the 21st, promises to be a great treat to Ware theatre goers. The play is one of the most celebrated light comedies ever written for the American stage, and simply bubbles over with humorous situations. It deals with society life; most of its action is laid in the Fifth Avenue hotel, New York city, and reflects well the growing tendencies of American life. The company carries special scenery, built for the production by Seavey of New York, and in their costuming is sparing no expense to make the performance complete in every detail. We anticipate that a full house will greet the boys, and show that Ware people appreciate the cordial feelings which the Amherst College men have for this town, as well as our interest in our own high school, under whose auspices they appear.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts. Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

My Athletic Girl.

Three times a week, with dumbbells big,
She toils and knows no ease,
And clad in some ungraceful rig
She clings to the trapeze.

Upon the horizontal bar,
Pendulumlike, she swings,
And like some lady circus star
Spins round the rings.

Each day she puts the boxing gloves
Upon her dainty hands,
And caring not for those she loves
She counters and she lands.

Oh, would to heaven she would try
A much more peaceful art
And go back to the days gone by
When she took up Delsarte.

For now I have to use great care
And know what I'm about,
To kiss her I don't even dare—
The girl might knock me out.

THE TUBE ROSE NOT A ROSE. The common tube rose is an excellent illustration of a popular misnomer. The plant is not a rose at all and has no connection with the rose family. Its name is a corruption. The French gardeners always call it plante tuberense, or tuber plant, and the latter part of the name was corrupted by ignorant persons into the tube rose. The similarity of sound, no doubt, led to the change of name and consequent mistake, similar instances having occurred.

TERENCE.

Terence stood in the Union Station, waiting for the Medford train. The busy doors were swinging in and out and people were bustling to the long and crowded trains. Suddenly a nervous man with a natty grip and an Easter lily rushed in. He looked round in a dazed way, while the lily swayed with sympathetic emotion, and at last he spied Terence. He took the Irishman by the arm.

"I say, my friend," and he pointed across the room, "is the clock right there?"

Terence gazed at the wall, and dodging the lily, turned round with a look of pity on his ruddy face.

"Begorra, an' it ain't nowhere else, sorr."

It was this same Terence, with his Kilkenny clothes and his stubby, faded derby, who settled down in Medford with only a few dollars in his pocket. At first the times were hard, and Norah took in washing to help pay the rent. It was a long and close pull, but Terence was always prompt on the first day of the month. A last, however, a cloud seemed to fall, for one day Robinson, the landlord, came in.

"Terence," he said, "times are hard."

"Faith, 'n they are that, sorr," and the Irishman looked silently at Norah and the tub.

"Well, Terence," and Robinson hesitated. "I've concluded to raise your rent."

Terence's face took on a brighter light, and he grasped the landlord's hand.

"Oi t'ank ye, sorr, for Oi haven't been able to raise it myself, bedad."—Boston Budget.

THEY WERE FOR HARMONY.—"Once," remarked the Congressman from Kentucky, when the Congressman from Georgia gave him a chance for his white alley, "I had a factional fight in one of the back counties in my district and I proceeded thither to effect a settlement, and obtain an amicable condition. I called a meeting of the leaders of the disgruntled element, and after an half hour's discussion, I said:

"Gentlemen, we owe it to our party to stand together and lay aside all dissentions, come out as one man for harmony."

"How's that?" quickly put in the spokesman, a grim and grizzled old wheelhorse.

"I repeated my advice, and they withdrew for consultation. In ten minutes they returned.

"Well, Colonel," said the old fellow carefully, "we've talked over what you've said and we air decided to foller your advice. We don't know harmony, but ef you say he's all right, we're for him and you can count on us."

Husband. "Does that novel turn out happily." Wife. "It doesn't say. It only says they were married."—New York Weekly.

Landlady. "Have you tried the coffee this morning, Mr. Linton?" Linton. "Yes, I have, and it has proved an alibi."—Brooklyn Life.

SLOCUM'S OZONIZED Norwegian COD LIVER OIL WITH GUAIACOL

Perhaps you don't know what Guaiacol is, but you know something of creosote as a remedy for indigestion and other diseases. Well, is a refined form of creosote, and is made from the resin of beech trees. It stimulates a languid appetite as the air of the woods does. As long as they can and will eat, consumptives can fight their disease. That is why Guaiacol is combined with ozone, a very active form of oxygen, in Slocum's Ozonized Norwegian Cod Liver Oil.

Guaiacol

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A GOOD WORD.—Joe was a youth of such exceeding popularity with his uncles and aunts that his mother was compelled to call a halt on her too indulgent brothers and sisters, who, she claimed, with justice, were spoiling the youngster with their reckless generosity, and rendering him heedless of the value of property.

"Why, do you know," said she to one of the too indulgent aunts, to whom she was explaining her trouble, the little rascal received fifty presents this very Christmas."

"Oh, mamma!" cried the young person in question, more than that. I received sixty-two presents."

"Well, I knew it was a great many," sighed his mother, but I wanted to keep on the safe side. I tried not to exaggerate."

"No," remonstrated Master Joe, in a patronizing tone; "but you should try not to exsmallerate, either."—Harper's Magazine.

Studd (an impecunious bachelor) complained to Stubbs (married) of his deplorable lack of acquaintance among ladies with eligible dowries.

"But," interposed Stubbs, "I can introduce you to three pretty young ladies having at least $20,000 each."

"For mercy's sake, do," cried Studds, "and I will be your creditor for life?"

"Creditor! My dear fellow, you have the terms confounded. Debtor, you mean!"

"No, creditor. As soon as I get possession of that $20,000, you will ask me for a loan, which I cannot refuse, though I know you'll never repay it."—Tit-Bits.

"May," said her husband as they prepared to go out calling, "do you really mean to use those calling cards with your name spelled 'Mae Kathryn Alys Smith?'" "I certainly do," replied Mrs. May Catherine Alice Smith. "Very well, then," said her husband firmly. "I am with you," and he politely presented her with a card neatly inscribed: "Jorje Phrederyc Albyrt Smith."—Chicago Record.

Miss Primlips—"When you say your prayers at night, do you pray for all men?" Miss Leftover—"No, indeed! Just one would be enough."—Life.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's new discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular price 50c. and $1.00.

Good and Bad Blood.

THE WEAK POINT IN THE SPRING.

Medicine Theory.

We are told that the source of three-fourths of our diseases is in our blood; that a good purgative three or four times a year will keep us in good health. Is this so or isn't it? It may be all right for strong, fat people; people whose blood is too rich. For thin people it certainly is not good. Dyspepsia, consumptives, pale, thin anæmic people suffer from poor blood, a scarcity of red corpuscles. No purgative or so-called blood medicine can help them.

"The blood is the life;" yes, but what makes the blood? Food, Good food is all that is needed to make poor blood rich.

Paskola, the rich pre-digested starch food, is often recommended by physicians for this very purpose.

There is no difficulty in understanding why it is that a small quantity of Paskola will do so much good. It is made out of man's most important food, starch. In order to help the weak stomach, it is pre-digested.

Any good pure tasty starch food will do you as much good as Paskola if you can digest it. If you can't, nothing will do you good, except Paskola, for it is already digested.

Paskola is not a blood medicine. It is a food that enriches the blood. It also helps the digestion of other food.

It makes thin, pale, poor blooded people so fat and healthy that their friends can hardly recognize them.

Mr. James C. Collins, of Syracuse, N. Y., says: "'Paskola' is indeed a food, and a regal one, too. I have already gained six and one-half pounds."

LIKE A MIRACLE.

AN AMHERST LADY RELATES HER EXPERIENCE TO A NEWSPAPER REPORTER.

Salt Rheum, Impure Blood, and a Racking Cough that Baffled The Skill of our Best Physicians. Finally Cured.

[FROM SPRINGFIELD, MASS., REPUBLICAN.]

In the town of Amherst lives Mr. Geo. R. Pierce and his mother, where they are widely known as the proprietors of the Amherst Creamery Association. Mrs. Pierce has been a sufferer for a long time with Salt Rheum and a most distressing cough that forebode that dread disease consumption, but now that crippled form and racking cough have given way to health and vigor.

Hearing of this a reporter called on Mr. and Mrs. Pierce and the following experience was related:

"For a long time I was a sufferer from Salt Rheum," said Mrs. Pierce, "which would trouble me from time to time, but about two years ago I was returning from a visit to a neighbor, when upon entering the house I slipped and hurt my knee. This seemed to make my Salt Rheum worse, for it got so bad I was in constant pain. I can't begin to tell you the agony I was in, my limbs were a mass of raw flesh covered with running sores. My friends would break down while talking to me and say they were afraid I would not live to see another spring, and I thought so too. Well, I heard of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream, and I sent for them and commenced using them at once, and in less than three weeks I could walk across the room, and before a great while was out of doors. Why, just think of it, last night I walked a mile, and I am sixty-three years of age. It shows that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and Salt Rheum Cream can do more than the physicians, for they made me well after my doctors told me I was incurable. I must also tell you of another preparation Dr. Kennedy advised to use, which did equally as much for me as Favorite Remedy and Salt Rheum Cream, it is Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam. I have had a wretched cough for the past fifteen years; the best doctors in this part of the state united in saying that it was incurable, and that it was only a matter of time before my lungs would give out; my sleep was restless, I would lie awake for hours.

"I well recollect the first time I used Dr. Kennedy's Cherry Balsam, it relieved my throat at once, and I slept all through that night, which was the first full night's rest I had in several years. It seemed like a miracle. I think I took but two bottles of Dr. Kennedy's Cherry Balsam, when I was entirely cured."

Many of Mr. Pierce's neighbors confirm her statement, and it was found that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, Cherry Balsam, and Salt Rheum Cream had made others in Amherst equally as happy by curing them of some troublesome or dread disease.

Upon inquiry it was learned that, although Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, Cherry Balsam, and Salt Rheum Cream can be purchased of any dealer of medicine, they are not patent medicines in any sense of the term. They are the result of the patient toil and experiment of Dr David Kennedy, M. D., one of New York State's foremost physicians and surgeons, and the present mayor of the city of Kingston (Rondout), N. Y., where he resides and prepares these medicines.

Favorite Remedy ranks with the medical profession as the most perfect of all blood and nerve medicines. It will cure all diseases of the skin, liver and kidneys. It restores the liver to a healthy condition, and effectually cures the worst cases of habitual constipation. It is a certain cure for all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females, and affords great protection from attacks that originate in the change of life. It cures scrofula, tetter, salt rheum, boils, scald head, ulcers, tumors, rheumatism, dyspepsia, all kidney, bladder and urinary diseases, gravel, diabetes and Bright's disease. In this last disease it has made many cures where all else has failed.

Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam will cure the worst cases of asthma, bronchitis, coughs, colds, incipient consumption, whooping cough or croup. Taken in connection with Favorite Remedy, it has never been known to fail. Price 25c, 50c and $1 a bottle. Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream is for external application and is sold at 50c a package. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy costs $1 a bottle or six bottles for $5.

Full directions accompanying each bottle, so that anyone can readily understand just how to take them for the different complaints.

Just received at the JOURNAL Office. Call

Haunted.

I am haunted, gentle reader, but in such a pleasant way,
I do not fear the "specter" one iota.
In fact, I would consider it a dreary sort of day
In which I was unable to devote a
Good portion of the fleeting hours unto my cheerful "phantom,"
And I'm "awful sorry" for the folks who have no "ghost" to "haunt" 'em!

My little "spook" came down the stair to "haunt" me t'other night,
As late I labored o'er a dreary matter.
Through the grim shadows of the hall I caught a glimpse of white,
And heard a tiny slipper's gentle patter;
And presently a baby-voice came thro' the door to greet me:
"Say, popper, did you fink I wuz a gobblun come to eat ye?"

HIS WIFE.

"Well, tell me about Henry Woodford. How did that match turn out?"

"Badly enough, thus far. He is the same delightful, good-natured fellow, always ready to do a kind thing. But that woman will be the ruin of him."

"How? What is the trouble?"

"The trouble is, she fancies herself an invalid; lies around, does nothing but read Charlotte M. Braeme and Bertha M. Clay—has every foolish whim gratified; and, in fact, I don't see how he stands it."

"Did she have any property?"

"Not a cent. It was an out-and-out love match. She has expensive tastes, and is indolent and extravagant. Why, his carriage hire is a big item of itself. She couldn't possibly walk a block, you know."

"Perhaps she is really a sufferer."

"Nonsense! She had that fall, you remember, at a skating rink. At first her spine was thought to be seriously injured. Woodford paid out several hundred dollars to have her cured, and the doctors discharged her, well, they said. But it has pleased her to drag around, a load on his hands, ever since. It is thought that he is much crippled financially; I know positively that he has lately mortgaged his interest in the firm. If he can't manage to make or save five thousand dollars by the end of this year, it is all over with him; and he will never do it at his present rate of living.

"Why doesn't he tell her? Has she no sense of feeling at all?"

"None, except for herself; and he is so fond of her that he will indulge her to his very last cent."

"I thought he looked a little down as he passed us this morning."

"Yes, he is beginning to realize that he has gone too far; and, poor fellow, it is tugging at him hard."

Did she hear aright? Was it of her, Eleanor Woodford, that they were talking? Swiftly she sped out of the dark, heavily-curtained back parlor of the stylish boarding house, and into her room, a gorgeous alcove apartment on the first floor. She could not mount the stairs on account of her weak spine. Weak spine? She forgot all about it as she paced the floor, angry tears gushing from her large brown eyes. It was shameful—it was wicked—to be so abused! She had never in her whole petted life been found fault with. As to money, what did she know about it? Her father, before his failure and death, had always gratified her. Her husband had never made any difference. Yet these were friends of his. Her bitter sobs ceased, and her wounded vanity gradually lost itself in bitter thoughts. Did all the world think of her with scathing criticisms like those of the two chance callers, who thus killed the time while waiting for some one to come down to them? She began to feel glad that she had overheard it. The merest accident had sent her into the back parlor. Was it true? What could she do? Her dear, kind husband in trouble, and she the cause! Oh, she must help him, somehow! Long she sat buried in thought, and when the well-known step sounded at the door, her face was radiant with a new resolve.

He came to her large easy chair with a step somewhat weary, but his kiss was as usual. "All right, Nellie. Had a good day? Why, you look—let me see—how do you look?" he said, cheerily.

"I look as if I loved my big boy very much, don't I?" she responded, merrily.

His answer was another kiss, and as he turned toward his dressing closet, her heart ached with unspoken tenderness.

Her dinner was brought up. She was not considered strong enough to sit at the table. For this service an extra charge was made.

Later, when he opened the evening paper, she sat and watched him. Surely those lines of care were new, now that he was not smiling fondly upon her. Oh, foolish, selfish wife! Rising gently, her long, handsome tea-gown trailing behind her, she stood beside him, one slender white hand upon his shoulder. Then, playfully putting by the paper, she sat down upon his knee.

"Well, dear, what now? Another new gown?" he asked, with his old sweet smile.

She pressed her lips slowly upon the broad white brow, another pang at her heart. Then she spoke:—

"Not this time. Harry, dear, let's go to Mrs. Wickham's to board."

"Mrs. Wickham's!" he echoed; "why, you wouldn't stay in her dull little place a week." But even as he spoke there flashed through his mind, in rapid calculation: "Twenty dollars a week there; forty, here; eighty dollars a month saved; nearly a thousand dollars a year."

"Don't you like it here?" were his next words, as he glanced around the luxurious suite.

"Yes," she said, "except that there are too many people. It is so noisy."

"Very well, then, we will try it—anything to please my darling;" and he wrapped his arms about her as he would have lulled a restless child.

The move was made, and Eleanor found that she was not so much fatigued as she had often felt after a day's lounging with a novel. Her husband thought it only a new whim; but, as it was not an expensive one, he could not complain. When he wanted to take her driving, she playfully told him she was learning to walk—horses were not safe.

The first step, she thought. Now for the next. It came to her almost by magic. In a little rear hall-room sat Margaret Dewees, clicking away at her typewriter. A strong, clear-headed girl who had maintained herself these ten years, and had put by her savings. She was soon to be married to a stalwart young farmer, the lover of her early youth. They had worked and waited. From the first she took an interest in the young wife, and it was given to her energy and common sense to help a suffering sister. Together they plotted and planned. Eleanor's lassitude passed away under vigorous rubbing and brisk walks.

Margaret's trousseau was a thing to be considered. From Eleanor's surplus stock of stylish gowns and garments the country girl's outfit was deftly concocted. When all was ready, the snug sum of two hundred dollars lay in her writing desk. Her grand piano, too large for the new quarters, was removed from the storage room to a dealer's and was sold for three hundred dollars more. She wrote to an uncle in Kansas City; told him of her little efforts, and asked what she should do with her mite. He was a real-estate man, and promptly invested it in a lot in the rising town of Duluth.

In exchange for her services as seamstress, Margaret taught Eleanor the use of the typewriter. When she married she left the instrument, for the summer months, in Eleanor's care. A nominal rent was agreed upon, and this was easy to pay, as Margaret's engagements were transferred to the new operator, while Margaret herself attended to chickens and cows, and her six-feet of husband.

Eleanor's energy did not stop there. She obtained pupils on the typewriter at five dollars each. She shipped a lot of old party-dresses, crushed and out of style, to the costumer's, and saved the proceeds. Every time her husband handed over her allowance of pin money, she put at least half of it in her "strong box."

It was hard to hide all this activity and cheerfulness from him, but she did. With her woman's enjoyment of a little mystery, and her high resolve to show herself worthy of him, she kept in the old rut as nearly as possible when he was at home. He saw that she was stronger, however, and it lightened his labors.

"My little woman does not ride or read any more," he said one evening in the indulgent tone he used toward her.

"Why, yes, I do read. Don't you see my little library there?"

"Yes, but it seems to me I miss something." He missed the litter of trashy novels he had been wont to see.

"I told you I was learning to walk," she added with a smile. "I really do walk somewhere every day."

"That pleases me most of all," he said in his cheering way; "but what will Dr. Buell think?"

"I don't care one bit. I have cut his acquaintance."

The end of the year rolled round. Eleanor watched her husband's face with ever increasing anxiety. One evening he sat buried in thought from which all her endeavors could not rouse him. He did not feel well, he said. All night he tossed and muttered. Calculations and figures were uppermost.

He was up early, as usual, and away. Eleanor hastened her preparations, and carefully counted her little hoard—the earnings of months. Early in the afternoon she came home with the proceeds of her last batch of typewriting, glowing with exercise and the happiness of contributing at least several hundreds to meet her husband's creditors. He was there, lying on the sofa, pale and hopeless. Forgetting all else, she flung herself beside him with a sob.

"Oh, Harry, my dearest, what is it? Tell me what it is that is killing you! I have a right to know."

"It is ruin, Eleanor. I have brought you to poverty—you whom I would have died to make happy!"

"You are talking in riddles, Harry," she exclaimed, rallying from her alarm. "Am I not the happiest woman in the world? And don't you see how well and strong I am?"

She coaxed the whole story from his lips. Then, with affected lightness, she said: "Is that all? Why, you frightened me terribly; I thought you were ill—had caught some horrible disease or other. "See here!" As she spoke she ran to her desk and took out her treasure, and poured it into his hands in her impulsive fashion.

"Eleanor! What is this?"

"This? Why, this is only your wife's selfishness and laziness in another form."

Then her story had to be told. Their combined efforts still fell short of the required sum, but she triumphantly produced the deed to the Western land. For a season there were caresses, and even tears of mutual love and thankfulness.

"My precious wife!" he fervently exclaimed, and he clasped her close. "What a treasure I have in you, if all the money in the world should fail! But your piano!" he said, with regret overcoming his appreciation of her sacrifice.

"Let it go," she said merrily. "I could not play worth listening to you must acknowledge that. It was an expensive toy—that's all."

Next day the balance of the debt was borrowed upon the security of the Western deed, and Harry Wood was a free man once more. When the five hundred dollars jumped to thousands in a sudden "boom," he bought a neat home. Margaret, the valued friend, supplied their table with produce from the farm. Eleanor was never quite content till Harry had looked up her two maligners and brought them to the home where she presided, and which her painfully-awakened energy had helped to buy. In time she told her secret, and thanked them for that ten minutes' gossip. In time, too, sons and daughters came, and found a mother prepared by self-denial for the exigencies of life.—Eugenia Dunlap, in New York Observer.

STOPPING A STRIKE.

Jowett's brevity of speech and dispatch of business never shone more than on the great occasion of his dealing with the refractory washerwomen of Balliol. These worthy dames struck for higher wages in one department. Twelve collars for a shilling was, I believe, the statutory price. They came to interview the master.

"The washerwomen have come to see you," said the butler.

"Show the ladies up," said the master. They clumped into the room, to find him fiddling with the poker at the ashes in the grate. He turned round. "Will you wash 12 collars for a shilling?" They began to expostulate. He touched the bell; in came the butler. "Show the ladies down."

Presently the butler appeared again.

"They seem sorry, sir—would like to see you again."

"Show them up."

The washerwomen found the master intent, as before, on the fire grate.

"Will you wash 12 collars for a shilling?" piped his cheery little voice. A stalwart speaker began to make explanations. He touched the bell. "Show these ladies down," said he, and down they went. Again the butler expressed a hope that he would see them. "Certainly; show them up." They entered the room. "Will you wash 12 collars for a shilling?" "We will," they cried. "Thank you—good day, good day," said the master; and touching the bell, he said: "Knight, show these ladies down." And the strike was over.—Cornhill Magazine.

MEANDERING.—A city girl writes, "It is a fond dream of mine to become a farmer's wife and meander with him down life's flowery pathway." Ah, yes, that is a nice thing to dream about, but when you have lived on the farm and followed this meandering business for a month or so, you will discover a wide chasm between the dream and the reality. You will think of this about the time your husband meanders out and leaves you without wood, and you have to meander up and down the lane pulling splinters off the fence with which to cook dinner. And when you meander around in the wet clover in search of the cows you will have a dim perception that fond dreams do not always pan out 100 cents on the dollar, and that there are several meanderings in farm life that are not listed in the dreaming category. The meandering business on the farm is not what it's cracked up to be.—Texas Siftings.

The Difficult Seed.

A little seed lay in the ground,
And soon began to sprout;
"Now which of all the flowers around,"
It mused, "shall I come out?"

"The lily's face is fair and proud,
But just a trifle cold;
The rose, I think, is rather loud,
And then, its fashion's old.

"The violet is very well,
But not a flower I'd choose;
Nor yet the canterbury bell—
I never cared for blues.

"Petunias are by far too bright,
And vulgar flowers beside,
The primrose only blooms at night,
And peonies speak too wide."

And so it criticised each flower.
This supercilious seed;
Until it woke one summer hour,
And found itself a weed.

OUTWITTED BY A CLERGYMAN.

A prominent Methodist clergyman in this city fell into a reminiscent mood the other evening and gave a party of friends a very entertaining account of the way in which he succeeded in obtaining an interview with the secretary of war in the days of the rebellion.

Visitors to Washington who have experienced the annoying difficulties and delays generally encountered in reaching the inner office of a member of the cabinet in these piping times of peace, can imagine what such an attempt meant in war times, when every cabinet officer, and particularly the secretary of war, was overwhelmed with work seven days in the week.

"It was a matter of the most pressing necessity," said the clergyman, "for me to go to the front of the union lines without an hour's delay. I reached Washington in the morning, and soon learned that I could not cross the Potomac into Virginia without a pass from the secretary of war.

"Thinking it would be no trouble to get the pass, I inquired where the war department was, and hurried up to Seventeenth street, and down the block to the entrance to the war department.

"Men in the line told me they were waiting their turn to see Secretary Stanton, and some of those near at hand had actually held their places twenty-four hours. I was also told that I must take my place at the tail end of the long line and perhaps I would reach the apartment the next day.

"That would never do for me, and as I walked slowly down the line I put on my 'thinking cap" and thought out a scheme to get into the secretary's office without any delay. Before I got to the end of the line I had formed a plan of procedure.

"I hurried down the avenue until I found a stationery shop, where I bought a package of foolscap paper and a couple large, official-looking envelopes. Folding up several sheets of the blank paper I filled each of the envelopes with them, sealed up the envelopes, and borrowed the stationer's pen long enough to address each to 'The Honorable Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.,' in big, black letters.

"Then with these envelopes in my hand, I went up to the war department. As soon as I was in sight of the two soldiers who stood on guard at the door, I put on the most important air I could assume and walked so fast it was just short of a run.

"As I crossed the entrance the soldiers dropped and crossed their muskets in front of me, just as I had expected them to do, but I waved the big envelopes at them and cried out: 'Important! important!' and they stepped aside, just as I had hoped they would.

"Once inside the building it was an easy matter to find the secretary's office. I told Mr. Stanton frankly how I got into the place, and he laughed heartily as he made out the pass it was so important I should have."—New York Herald.

A STORY WITH A RESONANT MORAL.

Young men ought not to play poker—or old men, for that matter—at any time, and when poker is played in business hours the heinousness of the act is flagrant. So, when President Warren Elliott of the Wilmington and Weldon Railway came unexpectedly upon a group of his young men playing poker, with coffee beans for chips, the other day, he accepted their explanation that there was no work on hand and the game was "just for amusement." At some remote period of his existance Mr. Elliott had been initiated into the intricacies of the game, and so he drew up a chair and watched it with interest. Each young man had in front of him a pile of coffee beans, which, as they were careful to explain to the President, were of no value whatever. As a matter of fact, they had been bought of the banker for twenty-five cents each.

The President of the road watched the game with mild interest, and from time to time absently helped himself to a pinch of beans from the different piles on the table, masticating them with the indifferent air of a man who knew that unground coffee was only 40 cents a pound. The anguish of the young men who saw their chips melt away was poignant, but nobody dared to explain. When the President had consumed all the beans in sight he said good night in the most affable way and went off with an innocent smile on his rosy, cheerful face. The gentleman who kept the bank and had no chips to redeem is now a warm admirer of the President.—New York Press.

A DISGUSTED QUAIL.

"Talk about your expressions on the faces of animals," said the artist, reaching for the tobacco jar, "I saw a quail once that exhibited disgust on its countenance as unmistakably as a man could. I was out in the woods sketching, when I heard a quail give its note of challenge. I returned the note and soon got an answer. Then I gave the bird's flocking signal. I kept up my whistling, giving first one signal then the other, and getting replies every now and then which came nearer and nearer.

"I kept on with my sketching and, in fact, didn't pay much attention to the bird. I was sitting against a rail fence. Suddenly the quail, which had been following my signals, flew on the fence just a little way from me. I looked at it and the expression on its face was too funny for anything. It had been expecting a good rattling fight, and instead of finding an enemy, had come upon me. I was certain from its look of disgust that it uttered mentally a string of quail profanity. If it met another quail within an hour I miss my guess if there wasn't a fierce battle."—New York Tribune.

Harry Dayton was a widower until a few weeks ago, when he married a Jersey widow. His children had been living in Auburn, and he naturally brought them to this city upon his marriage. The morning after his son's arrival, in the course of conversation Harry used the word "conscience."

"What's conscience?" asked the little fellow.

The fond parent assumed a knowing look and replied slowly, with great feeling—

"Conscience, my boy? Why, that's a gift from God which tells us when we do anything wrong."

"Hum," commented the little fellow, thoughtfully, "we don't have that in Auburn."—New York World.

PALMER NEWS.

Memorial Day Programme.

The programme for the observance of Memorial Day is as follows: Next Sunday evening the Grand Army post, accompanied by the Woman's Relief Corps, will go to Thorndike to attend divine services in the Congregational church, on invitation of the pastor, Rev. E. B. Blanchard. All honorably discharged veterans of the civil war are invited to participate in the exercises of Wednesday, Memorial Day. The post will assemble in Memorial Hall in this village and be ready to move at 8 o'clock. The post and invited guests will be accompanied by the Thorndike Brass Band, and will march to the Point of Rocks, where carriages will be taken for the cemeteries in the other villages. At each cemetery there will be singing by a male quartette, and the graves of fallen comrades will be decorated with flowers. After the exercises at the cemetery in this village the post will march to the hall, where dinner will be served by the members of the Woman's Relief Corps, after which, at 2 o'clock, the address of the day will be delivered by Rev. F. E. Jenkins, to which the public is invited. Singing will be furnished by the male quartette, composed of E. B. Taylor, W. A. Weld, C. F. Orcutt and C. H. Clark, under the direction of Mr. Orcutt. These pieces will be sung at the cemeteries or in the hall:

Decoration Hymn.....Winch
"We Gather Here With Reverence".....Collin Coe
"The Boys that Marched to Glory".....C. Frechich
"Blest be the Ground".....W. J. D. Leavitt
"The Artillerist's Oath".....C. F. Adams
"Rest, Soldier, Rest".....White
"We Deck Their Graves Alike To-day".....Danks

Contributions of flowers and evergreen are requested, and all who have such are asked to send them to Memorial Hall by Tuesday night. The post particularly requests the presence of children at the several cemeteries.

The Journal's Art Series.

Calls for the last three parts of the Magic City are coming thick and fast, as well as many for whole sets and for bindings. Remember that an elegant and substantial binding can be secured for the whole series for $1.25, or a much finer one in half morocco for $2. All you need to do is to bring the parts to us and take away the book when bound. In this way the parts can be preserved from mutilation, as will occur if left loose, and at the same time you secure a handsome ornament for the parlor or sitting room table which if purchased at a book store would cost at least $5, and probably nearer $10. "Glimpses of America" number 5 is here, and introduces the reader to Hance's Trail on the Grand Canon of Colorado, one of the rotary snow plows used on the railroads over the western mountains, portions of the ancient palace and city wall at Casa Grande, Arizona, the beautiful Bridal Veil at Soshone Falls, the Falls of the Parunuweap in Colorado, the Twin Lakes in Utah, Black Rock in Great Salt Lake, the Temple at Salt Lake City, Brigham Young's grave, and other places. Part number 4 contained another of those beautiful cameragraphs in natural colors, showing Hell Gate, Ausable Chasm; did you get one? If not, it is not yet too late. Part number 6 will be ready next week, and will contain 21 views of the finest scenery in and about Salt Lake City, Utah, Wyoming, Dakota and Idaho. Copies of all parts to date will be delivered on payment of 10 cents each, no coupon being required. Remember that every fourth number contains a full-page cameragraph, showing the scenery in natural colors.

Charged with Forgery.

Deputy Sheriff Studley last night arrested Robert J. Connors on a charge of forgery preferred by Sherman Stebbins. He was placed in the lock-up but secured bail in the sum of $600 for his appearance this morning, when the case was continued until next Friday.

Connors came from Brighton some time ago, and has been engaged in buying cattle and shipping them to the yards at that place. Stebbins is in the same occupation, and the men have had more or less business together. The crime with which Connors is charged is the forgery of Stebbins's name to a check on the Palmer National Bank for $400, which was given to a New Hampshire man. Connors claims that he and Stebbins have been doing business under the name of S. M. Stebbins & Co., that he has previously given checks signed in this way and that there has been no question about them, and that this check for $400 was signed the same way, S. M. Stebbins & Co. Mr. Stebbins, however, claims that the signature is simply S. M. Stebbins.

There is another matter which has grown out of the arrest. When searched by the officer $320 was taken from Connors by order of the court, and this has been attached by C. L. Gardner in behalf of F. M. Robinson of Mansfield, Ct., for a bill of $21.50, alleging that Connors hired a team from his stable for the day, but that it was several days before it was returned, and he wants pay accordingly. Connors denies this, and T. W. Kenefick sues Mr. Studley for the money.

The hearts of the farmers were made glad by the rain which came last Friday night and Saturday. The alterations on the tower of the fire engine house to admit of the placing of the new alarm bell are completed, and the bell was put in position Wednesday. It is probable that the striker will be changed from the bell of the Universalist church next Monday. The new bell is considerably sharper in tone than the one on which the alarm is now struck.

Hunting's circus, one of the old-fashioned one-ring kind, is to exhibit in Palmer June 2d, and in regard to the exhibition the New York Clipper of April 7th says:

The show is the largest, strongest and best Mr. Hunting has ever run; not a weak act in the ring. The band is elegant, every man a soloist, under the leadership of Eugene Wack. The Le Vans are doing a fine act this season, also the "Graces." Bob Hunting's clowning takes well; he is a great favorite. Louis Hunting, the manager's son, is developing into a first-class performer. He does several acts now that will rank with the best of them, although almost a child in years. The menagerie is quite a feature this season, and is among the top ones.

S. history and algebra.

Among the new laws passed by the present Legislature are the following: That in the absence of the probation officer of any city or town the judge of the court may appoint a probation officer pro tem, who shall be paid by the county for fourteen days' service in any one year; any service in excess of that time shall be paid by the regular probation officer. This practically gives the regular officer a vacation of two weeks. The other is that all ink used in the keeping of town or city records of whatever character shall be furnished by the secretary of state, and that he is to make contracts for such ink, of a quality specified by him, and supply it to the officials. This will apply to even the most insignificant of town officials, down to the keeper of the lock-up, and will result in having records which will be preserved for future generations. As it now is many old records which would be valuable are worthless because of the ink with which they were written having faded. This act goes into effect September 1st.

District Court.

Two civil entries were made in the district court last Saturday, Thomas Connelly against W. H. Williams, and Lepheren Chevalier against C. T. Brainerd. Mr. Brainerd had been to Three Rivers after the road scraper, his horses being attached to a pair of wheels. On the return trip the wheels were being drawn behind the scraper, when a couple of bicyclists were met, one of whom was Chevalier. Mr. Brainerd was in the regular track made by teams, at the left of which was a path used by wheelmen. Chevalier went all right until he passed the scraper, but in some way managed to "wobble" over into the pair of wheels trailing behind, and thinks Mr. Brainerd should settle for his damaged wheel.

In the criminal court last Saturday James Manning of Boston was sent to the house of correction for two months for drunkenness, while John Siemienski of Bondsville paid $5 for an assault. John B. Carmody of Bondsville, for an assault on Principal Fuller of the grammar school in that village, pleaded nolo and the case was continued until June 2. H. A. Lombard, S. H. Ellery and F. P. White of Brimfield, with Robert Connor of Palmer, charged with disturbing the peace at Bondsville last week, pleaded guilty and paid $15 each. On Monday William McCaffery of Providence was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for two years for vagrancy. He was begging about the streets Saturday in a drunken condition, and was quite abusive when his requests were not granted. When Officer Studley arrested him he made a vigorous resistance, going so far as to strike the officer. On Tuesday Thomas Keating of Boston was sent up for two months for drunkenness, while Daniel Barrett of Palmer paid $5 for the same offense. Leopolde Delcagtelo, for the larceny of various articles from three of his fellow Italians, was bound over to the September term of the superior court in the sum of $600 which he could not furnish Yesterday a hearing was had in the matter of liquors recently seized at the house of Elias Holmes on the road to Three Rivers, and they were ordered forfeited.

Chas. P. Haynes narrowly escaped instant death Wednesday morning while at work in his sawmill near the Red Bridge. One of the dogs which hold the logs upon the carriage was set out too far so that the saw struck it. Instead of reversing the carriage Mr. Haynes thought he would lift the dog, so taking hold of it with both hands he attempted to remove it. Meanwhile the saw was still revolving at full speed, cutting its way into the steel dog. While bending over and trying to lift it away, a small piece of the steel flew and struck Mr. Haynes in the forehead, cutting him quite badly. He is to be congratulated upon his narrow escape, for had the piece of steel been larger than it was it must certainly have caused him serious injury, if not instant death.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, May 23, 1894.

The House disposed of the resolve for biennial elections in just 45 minutes Thursday afternoon, and it failed to receive the necessary two-thirds vote. There were 106 yeas and 84 nays and 9 pairs, or 209 men recorded. The adverse vote was one of the largest ever given, and included 44 Republicans, while four Democrats voted for it. Mr. Malone of Greenfield made the chief speech for the resolve, while three Republican members of the committee on constitutional amendments, and among the ablest men in the House,—Messrs. Abbott of Watertown, Irwin of Northampton and Jones of Melrose—spoke against it. Only one really new point was made on either side. It was that, under the proposed system, every alternate House would be so largely composed of inexperienced men as to be a source of serious danger and sure to give the next session much work to correct its mistakes.

The House has passed to engrossment the bill to forbid the exercise of liquor licenses within 400 feet of schoolhouses, but worded so that the distance shall be measured on the street, not in an air line, so that no license shall be exercised on premises abutting in the rear, and the bill shall not apply to hotels with 25 rooms or over. But the Senate has taken most of the force out of the bill by striking out the provision that the 400 feet shall be measured on connecting streets.

Signs point to a warm contest over the rapid transit bill for Boston. An illustration of the interest in the matter was seen when the proposition was made to have the models of the different systems exhibited in a room in the state house. It took nearly an hour for the House to settle the matter. The hearings by the finance committee on the Meigs bill, which was reported by the transit committee, have shown the masterly tact and skillful training of the lawyers. Point by point the case is contested before the committee, and the investigation appears to be thorough. The importance of the case and the magnitude of the contest can be foreseen from these preliminaries.

While the people may assume that the Legislature is properly open to severe criticism, as has been so often and so justly assumed in the past, yet the latest developments require that the people be not over hasty. The messengers of the House, for instance, complain that they have not been worked as hard for years as they have this year with late sessions of the House and night sessions of committees. When accounts are made up, this Legislature will make a good showing.

Gov. Greenhalge signed on Tuesday the bill for the division of the town of Longmeadow, and the people of the ancient village had an exuberant jubilation on the same evening. It was good politics, as well as good judgment, for the governor to do this. Most of the members from Western Massachusetts were in favor of division, and it is to be assumed that they represent the sentiment of the people who are best informed regarding the facts. It is singular that the old Beverly fight showed itself in this matter. William D. Sohier, who represented Beverly in the House four years ago, visited Gov. Greenhalge upon the matter. It would strengthen the anti-divisionists of Beverly if Longmeadow were kept intact, but the governor decided wisely that the Beverly case should not prejudice the people of Longmeadow. It will thus be seen that the state, in the case of Longmeadow, is carrying out its settled and undoubtedly beneficent policy of dividing towns when the villages are so distant and separate that they had better be towns by themselves with the full power to manage their own affairs. There never has been any state policy of not dividing towns, as some have mistakenly declared.

It was not strange that the Senate defeated the bill to make nine hours a legal day's work for employes of corporations and manufacturing establishments. No sufficient debate occurred on it in the House, but the members seemed to be afraid to take it up and oppose it. Very likely the fact that it was a labor bill prevented that full discussion which would otherwise have occurred. But if the members of the House shirked their duty, it did not secure the passage of the bill. The corportions met the emergency in the Senate and the bill really had no chance there. But the bill was not debated upon its merits, as it should have been. Conflicting interests have clashed, and the strongest for the time has won.

The vote of 21 to 118 against admitting the bill of Mr. Bliss of West Springfield to restore the law for taxing mortgaged real estate twice does not fairly represent the support of the House for that measure, but it seems certain that a clear majority is against restoring the old law. The debate has not been fruitless, for it has led to the open admission by so strong an advocate of the old law as Mr. Mellen of Worcester, that that law does impose double taxation. But since human ingenuity, as he says, cannot devise a tax which does not impose double taxation, he would tax the rich twice, rather than the poor. The debate has also shown that the old law rests upon what most men will doubtless regard as the absurdity that a man creates wealth when he draws a note and signs it. If this admission, or assertion, by Mr. Bliss of West Springfield, special champion of the old double tax law, does not return to plague his friends next year, then his opponents are not half as bright as I believe them to be.

It has been decreed by the caucus of Republic ansenators that the bill to establish liquor license commission in cities shall be passed, but in an amended form, by which no commissioner can hold, at the time, any other municipal office, and that any commissioner can be removed after a public hearing upon charges. It is the purpose of the bill to take liquor politics out of the boards of aldermen and to stop some corruption which has become frightful, but there can be no question that the liquor interest will now be felt in the election of mayor. It would not be strange if this agitation helped, in the long run, the passage of the Norwegian system bill. LANDON.

MONSON.

MONSON'S WATER WORKS.

What the Voters Will Be Asked to Authorize Next Week.

A special town meeting is called for next Thursday at 11 a. m., the object being to see what action the town will take in the matter of providing a water supply. The principal articles in the warrant are: To choose three water commissioners, who shall hold office for one, two and three years from the next annual town meeting; to determine whether the town will vote to issue its negotiable bonds to an amount not exceeding $65,000, under the authority of the Legislature which was recently accepted by the town, and to provide for the establishment of a sinking fund to pay the same; to see if the town will take or authorize its water commissioners to take in behalf of the town, any water supply, water right or easement within the town, in accordance with the provisions of the act before mentioned; to see if the town will authorize its treasurer, with the approval of the water commissioners, to borrow money in anticipation of the sale of its water bonds; to see if the town will authorize its water commissioners to make contracts for and in behalf of the town; to adopt a seal of the town.

The water supply which the voters will be asked to authorize is that which proposes the taking of water from the farm of Charles Callahan, about half a mile above the dam at the mill on the Conant brook. There will be no damages for the taking of the water, as by the proposed system more water is developed than will probably ever be used, and the only damages will be for what little land is needed from Mr. Callahan for the building of a collecting well. It is proposed to construct a collecting well about 75 feet in diameter and 25 feet deep, the water entering it from the soil about, and being taken directly from this well into the pipes. A well about 25 feet in diameter supplies the town of Ware with all the water it uses. The test well on the Callahan place shows a vein of coarse water-bearing gravel of more than ten feet in depth which lies below the hard-pan. The analysis of the water by the state board of health shows it to be remarkably pure, and equal to the best spring water in Massachusetts. The water will be brought from the collecting well by a twelve-inch pipe, which will be laid through the Conant pond and strike the highway a short distance below the Conant house, following this road to Main street in the village. The 12-inch main will extend through Main street from the Branch road at South Monson to the soldiers' monument, where a 10-inch pipe will be put in on High street to Pleasant, an eight-inch pipe running from Pleasant to Spring, and a six-inch pipe from Spring to the end of High street. From the soldiers' monument a ten-inch pipe will extend along Main street to a point near D. G. Potter's house, an eight-inch pipe from there to Chestnut street, and a six-inch pipe to about 400 feet west of Chestnut. A ten-inch pipe will extend out Bliss street to the railroad, and an eight-inch pipe will be laid on Cushman street to Pease avenue, with a six-inch pipe about 500 feet south on Pease avenue. There will be eight-inch pipes on Mechanic street, Cemetery street from Mechanic to Margaret, from Cemetery street along Granite street to the new barn of the W. N. Flynt Granite Co., Flynt avenue, Pleasant street, Washington street, Lincoln street, Green street, Bridge street and Elm street. Six-inch pipe will be laid on Bank street from the railroad station to Harrison avenue, about 500 feet on West street, from Cushman street through Pease to State, along State to Pearl, and about 1000 feet west on Pearl, on Squier street, Highland avenue, Hampden avenue, Reynolds avenue, King avenue, and about 500 feet south on Oak street from Bliss street. At the intersection of all streets on which it is not at present proposed to lay pipes a T is provided for, so that extentions can be made at any time. Hydrants are to be scattered thickly through the town, averaging from 400 to 500 feet apart. The pressure will be ample for fire protection, about 125 pounds at the Congregational church and nearly 200 pounds at Memorial Hall. The test will be to furnish four fire streams through one and a quarter inch nozzles for 10 hours under 100 pounds pressure to the square inch.

At a town-meeting a year ago the town appropriated $200 for an ash sidewalk on Knox avenue. C. P. Morse was then road commissioner and his residence is located on the avenue. He expended about $600 in putting in Monson granite curbing and making the sidewalk, and charged the expense to the town, instead of collecting half the cost from the abuttors, according to law. When the matter was brought up at the spring meeting there was a general kick against it, and the matter was put into the hands of the new board of selectmen, who are now trying to collect half the cost from the abuttors, who declare they will not pay it unless compelled by law. The account against the abuttors is as follows: C. P. Morse, $40; Mrs. Chicoine, $16; Matthew Meaney, $41; Mooney estate, $14; Mrs. Warner, $11; Miss Flannigan, $14; C. E. Stevens, $2; Demond estate, $2; Boston and Albany railroad, $260.

TAKE A DAY OFF

And Visit the Barnum and Bailey Greatest Show on Earth.—Special Low Rate Excursions from Everywhere.

The Barnum & Bailey greatest show on earth will exhibit at Springfield May 31, and for this notable occasion the various railroads offer such low excursion rates that it is cheaper to go than to stay at home. This great show and national educator, always the biggest and best, has this year eclipsed all its previous records for the multitude of its attractions. The circus department comprises every difficult equestrian act, aerial feat, arenic display, athletic and acrobatic trial, hippodrome race, animal trick, and mad-cap caper of clown and actor, with tumbling and leaping; in fact everything of a remarkable kind in the way of meritorious feature or attraction. The horses alone are valued at $160,000. Then there are strange animal freaks, giant and pigmy creatures, odd and curious beasts and birds, and two giant gorillas—a male and female, and the only two in captivity in the world. The circus department contains only champions in their various lines and specialties, and duplicates of their acts or performances are almost impossible. The equestrians, both male and female, the aerialists, athletes, acrobats, sprinters, are all champions. At no time, past or present, was there ever organized a better or more wonderful circus. All countries are represented by its greatest and best artists, a fact which could never be stated before with such absolute truth as this year. The Ethnological Congress is of itself an enormous show, comprising as it certainly does, all the strangest types of human beings on the globe. It is a veritable world's fair brought to your very doors, and within its immense water-proof tents are thousands of the most interesting and wonderful features, all selected with the express object of amusing, instructing, causing mirth, innocent and harmless recreation.

The newest and freshest things in women's ready-to-wear suits and dresses. Correct shapes and charming styles. And often at a price that barely pays the cost of the material. An all-wool serge Tuxedo suit, in black, navy and gray, at $5. The style and make are almost identical with a $25 suit. A Covert cloth suit at $5; correctly made with full skirt. And they're both perfect fitting, too!

Main floor of Pynchon street building.

Our carpet man thinks his stock too large in some qualities. Has a notion of his own about reducing it, too. Thus: the spectacle of all-wool Ingrain that usually call for 50 cents a yard, dropping to 37½ cents; 67 cent Lowell and Hartford Ingrains, tumbling to 55; Tapestries to 45 cents, and Brussells to 72½. But the unkindest cut of all is on the Moquettes; beautiful things, but in this case too numerous for their exalted station. Down they come to 79 cents. Whew! Carpets that sell for $1.15 a yard!

Second floor of Pynchon street building.

Fancy Taffeta dress silks. A beautiful assortment! The daintiest and most exquisite collection, by all odds, ever seen in Springfield. $1 and $1.25 qualities—either at 75 cents a yard. Send for samples.

Better values in storm serges this year than ever. There is nothing better for seaside, mountain or outdoor wear. It keeps its luster through a wonderful amount of rough usage. We have it in navy blue:

38 inches wide at 37½ cents.
44 inches wide at 50 cents.
45 inches wide at 58 and 75 cents.
50 inches wide at 75, 87½ and $1.
54 inches wide at $1.20.

In either of these, with a little Pearline, you can wash clothes more easily, more quickly, and more cheaply, than in any other way. You can, we say—but perhaps you don't have to. Then (?) the ease of it doesn't affect you so much. But the quickness, the thoroughness and the economy of it does. The less time that's spent on your clothes, the less it costs you—it's money in your pocket every time they are saved from the wearing rub, rub, rub of the old way. But the water doesn't make any difference. Use what's handiest. Hot or cold, hard or soft, salt or fresh, rain or shine, it's all the same if you have Pearline. When you don't have it—then there is a difference.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had [illegible] one down, and I was so much better that I [illegible] my own work. On my recommendation [illegible] bers are taking this valuable remedy. [illegible] Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill."

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

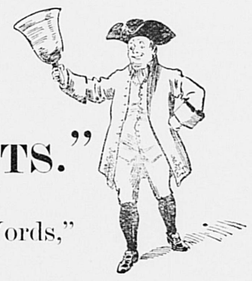
CHARLES E. LYNCH.



"TALKING FACTS."

"Facts Speak Louder Than Words,"

It's a fact as incontestable as that the sun gives heat and light, that there is not in Springfield, nor elsewhere, handsomer, finer or better clothing than that sold by CHARLES E. LYNCH. It's as superior to ordinary clothing as the day is to night, gold to all other metals. That this is a sure, certain and incontestable fact, hundreds upon hundreds will most cordially and abundantly testify.

It is a fact, too, that gentlemen who have never in their lives worn so-called ready-made clothing are astonished, and delighted too, to find at LYNCH'S clothing that fits them as thoroughly, as perfectly, as any ever made for them—astonished that it should be, delighted, above all, at the consequent and substantial saving in dollars and cents.

These Telling, Talking Facts Are:

LYNCH'S FINE OVERCOATS,

Ranging in price from $10 to $30.

LYNCH'S ELEGANT SUITS,

From $10 to $25.

LYNCH'S FINE TROUSERS,

From $1 to $7.

Let those dress well who ne'er did so before,
And those who have dressed well now dress the more.

CHARLES E. LYNCH,

Promoter of Fashionable Clothing,

367 and 369 Main Street, - - Springfield, Mass.

HIS OFFER DECLINED.

"No, said the girl, resolutely, "I cannot do it!"

The young man pleaded his cause with all the fire, energy and perseverance of youth. Nor did he rely entirely upon those three qualities. He brought others into play. He tried to suggest to himself and to her all possible existing objections; carefully reviewing them, and skilfully meeting them with well-turned arguments to the contrary. Then he paused and once more proffered his earnest request.

"No," repeated the girl, in a broken, troubled voice, "it is no use. I cannot dare not to do it!"

Former tactics were changed. Instead of employing subtle reasoning and wily argument, the youth now had recourse to impassioned pleading. In tones full of touching entreaty he implored the girl to grant the first, the only request he had ever made of her. He tried to show how happy, how full of joy and bliss her acquiescence would make him. How, in the event of her finally and cruelly refusing, his disappointment would be almost too great to bear. He wanted to rise from the position he was then in, he said, and one word from her would enable him to do so. There was a wistfulness in his voice when he said this that would have touched the heart of a woman shopping; and he paused, looking up into her eyes once more for a reply. It came.

"No," she muttered through her clenched teeth, with a whole Brooklyn of despair in her face. "Ask me no more—I cannot stoop to do it!"

Then there was absolute silence between them. The girl swayed to and fro, the man sat motionless. At the end of ten minutes they parted as they had met—strangers.

He had offered her his seat in a Broadway car. She had put on a fresh, white shirt that morning, so stiffly starched that she dared not accept his kind offer.—Hallo.

A LAZY FAMILY.

"Doesn't that new office boy of ours seem to be rather lazier than usual?" inquired Judge Crabtree.

"He's the laziest boy we ever had," answered his partner. "I caught him this morning setting his lips right and then putting muscilage on them so that he could whistle 'After the Ball,' without the intolerable muscular exertion of holding the proper pucker."

"Well, I hope we shan't have to resort to artificial respiration to keep him from dying on our hands, as we had to with the last one," returned the judge. "By the way, what's this boy's name?"

"Tommy."

"But his last name?"

"Cregow."

"Oh, I see—it runs in the family. I knew a man named Cregow when I first came to the city who was undoubtedly Tommy's father. This man Cregow had to be carried on a stretcher when he went to the circus. He used to show the greatest ingenuity in avoiding exertion of any man I ever knew. For instance, he was an inveterate smoker, but of course with his disposition his pipe went out very frequently. The labor of scratching matches to relight it was simply dragging him down, and he saw it. So he moved into a house where the elevated road ran close to the second-story windows, and there he used to sit near one of them all day long, smoking and resting. When he found his pipe out, he would simply reach out of the window with a match and let a passing train rub against it, and there he was. Ingenious man. Might have made his mark in the world if he hadn't been so lazy. I'll ask Tommy to-night when he unguns his mouth how his father is getting along."—New York Tribune.

"P-P-PETERFIED."

Joe Judkins is just home from the northwest. Joe has always had the sad misfortune to be a stammerer. He was telling, among other things, about a petrified forest which he visited somewhere in North Dakota.

"Every t-t-ree in it," he said, "was p-p-peterfied. Yes," he went on, "in one p-p-place we f-f-found a l-l-log c-c-cabin, and that was p-p-peterfied too. A sh-sh-short d-d-distance from the l-l-log cabin s-s-stood a m-m-man with a g-g-gun up at his sh-sh-oulder, and the man was p-p-peterfied, and the gun was p-p-peterfied. And the s-s-smoke f-f-from the gun was in the air, and that was p-p-peterfied, and not f-f-far off, j-j-just in l-l-line with the gun, was a little b-b-bird, and he was p-p-peterfied, too, and s-s-staid right there in the air in his p-p-peterfied state."

"Joe," we replied with indignation, "why do you try to impose upon us with your petrified nonsense? This is sheer rot that you are giving us. The idea of a petrided bird hanging suspended full in midair! Why, Joe, the weight of the bird would obey the law of gravitation and fall to the ground as soon as he was shot."

"Oh-h," exclaimed the imperturbable joker, "you d-d-don't understand. The l-l-law of gravitation was p-p-peterfied too."—Boston Courier.

COUNTERFEIT COINS.

Within the last few years numbers of forgeries of extremely rare coins in the British museum and in private collections have been sold by auction in London. So good is their execution that it seems probable that means have been devised for casting steel dies on plaster casts or of hardening electrotype dies. The manufacture of rare "siege pieces," carried on in one of our midland towns, shows a far lower amount of skill.

When genuine but defaced coins are restruck with new impressions, it is very difficult to discover the fraud. Some genuine ancient coins are surfrappees in this manner—as, for instance, a whole class of Jewish coins which are struck on Roman silver denarii. But when the image and superscription of William III can be discerned underlying the device on a rare crown piece of Elizabeth the question of its authenticity is soon solved.—Longman's Magazine.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's new discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with Pneumonia succeeding La Grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption, and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottles free of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware. Regular price 50c. and $1.00.

SLOCUM'S OZONIZED Norwegian COD LIVER OIL WITH GUAIACOL

It is as easy to explain a cold as to catch one. The skin, exposed to a sudden change in temperature, ceases to throw off waste matter, and double duty is imposed upon the lungs. Hence, inflammation of the bronchial tubes and frequently consumption. A medicine to cure consumption must help not only the lungs but the stomach, because good appetite and good digestion are required to fortify the system. Slocum's Ozonized Norwegian Cod Liver Oil, with Guaiacol, is a great flesh-maker.

IS IT THE LIVER?

Can Liver Pills Cure the Evils of Indigestion?

For a hundred years doctors have disagreed about the liver. Only yesterday, figuratively speaking, they woke up to its real uses in the digestion and absorption of food.

Billiousness is not indigestion. Liver pills stimulate the secretions, but do not stimulate the storage powers of the liver or aid digestion. If you cannot digest starch food your liver cannot store up a reserve. You are always hungry but food does you no good.

It is not the liver. Pills won't help you. It is partly the stomach, but medicine won't help it. What you need is Paskola, a food that is already digested. Paskola is made of grains and fruits, artificially transformed into the actual products of digestion. When swallowed it is at once absorbed without further digestion, and part of it is stored up in the liver. There is no waste about Paskola. It is a highly concentrated food, but unlike most concentrated foods, which are usually indigestible, it causes the stomach to work, because it is already digested. Paskola helps the stomach to digest other food. It is the food for all people who suffer from indigestion.

Mr. Charles E. Isaacs, 413 Main street, Worcester, Mass., says: "I have tried many doctors and countless patent medicines—all were of no avail till I took 'Paskola.' To eat a meal now is a pleasure—heretofore it has been a torture."

LIKE A MIRACLE.

AN AMHERST LADY RELATES HER EXPERIENCE TO A NEWSPAPER REPORTER.

Salt Rheum, Impure Blood, and a Racking Cough that Baffled The Skill of our Best Physicians. Finally Cured.

[FROM SPRINGFIELD, MASS., REPUBLICAN.]

In the town of Amherst lives Mr. Geo. R. Pierce and his mother, where they are widely known as the proprietors of the Amherst Creamery Association. Mrs. Pierce has been a sufferer for a long time with Salt Rheum and a most distressing cough that forebode that dread disease consumption, but now that crippled form and racking cough have given way to health and vigor.

Hearing of this a reporter called on Mr. and Mrs. Pierce and the following experience was related:

"For a long time I was a sufferer from Salt Rheum," said Mrs. Pierce, "which would trouble me from time to time, but about two years ago I was returning from a visit to a neighbor, when upon entering the house I slipped and hurt my knee. This seemed to make my Salt Rheum worse, for it got so bad I was in constant pain. I can't begin to tell you the agony I was in, my limbs were a mass of raw flesh covered with running sores. My friends would break down while talking to me and say they were afraid I would not live to see another spring, and I thought so too. Well, I heard of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream, and I sent for them and commenced using them at once, and in less than three weeks I could walk across the room, and before a great while was out of doors. Why, just think of it, last night I walked a mile, and I am sixty three years of age. It shows that Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and Salt Rheum Cream can do more than the physicians, for they made me well after my doctors told me I was incurable. I must also tell you of another preparation Dr. Kennedy advised to use, which did equally as much for me as Favorite Remedy and Salt Rheum Cream, it is Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam. I have had a wretched cough for the past fifteen years; the best doctors in this part of the state united in saying that it was incurable, and that it was only a matter of time before my lungs would give out; my sleep was restless, I would lie awake for hours.

"I well recollect the first time I used Dr. Kennedy's Cherry Balsam, it relieved my throat at once, and I slept all through that night, which was the first full night's rest I had in several years. It seemed like a miracle. I think I took but two bottles of Dr. Kennedy's Cherry Balsam, when I was entirely cured."

Many of Mr. Pierce's neighbors confirm her statement, and it was found that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, Cherry Balsam, and Salt Rheum Cream had made others in Amherst equally as happy by curing them of some troublesome or dread disease.

Upon inquiry it was learned that, although Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, Cherry Balsam, and Salt Rheum Cream can be purchased of any dealer of medicine, they are not patent medicines in any sense of the term. They are the result of the patient toil and experiment of Dr David Kennedy, M. D., one of New York State's foremost physicians and surgeons, and the present mayor of the city of Kingston (Rondout), N. Y., where he resides and prepares these medicines.

Favorite Remedy ranks with the medical profession as the most perfect of all blood and nerve medicines. It will cure all diseases of the skin, liver and kidneys. It restores the liver to a healthy condition, and effectually cures the worst cases of habitual constipation. It is a certain cure for all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females, and affords great protection from attacks that originate in the change of life. It cures scrofula, tetter, salt rheum, boils, scald head, ulcers, tumors, rheumatism, dyspepsia, all kidney, bladder and urinary diseases, gravel, diabetes and Bright's disease. In this last disease it has made many cures where all else has failed.

Dr. David Kennedy's Cherry Balsam will cure the worst cases of asthma, bronchitis, coughs, colds, incipient consumption, whooping cough or croup. Taken in connection with Favorite Remedy, it has never been known to fail. Price 25c, 50c and $1 a bottle. Dr. David Kennedy's Salt Rheum Cream is for external application and is sold at 50c a package. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy costs $1 a bottle or six bottles for $5.

Full directions accompanying each bottle, so that anyone can readily understand just how to take them for the different complaints.

The Days That Never Return.

Over the strings of my harp to-day
Floats a song that is half a sigh
Like the sound of leaves when the wind sweeps by,
Like the sound of breakers far away,
As they beat and sob,
As they beat and throb,
Till I hear a voice in the distant roar,
On that lonely stretch of sandy shore.

Over the strings of my heart to-day
Floats a song for the dying year,
A song that thrills with an unshed tear
Thro' the winter twilight, cold and gray,
As the breakers sob,
As the breakers throb,
And I hear the voice with its old refrain,
For the days that never come back again.

Over the strings of my harp to-day
Floats a song for my sweet lost youth,
For, oh, I would give in very truth,
Riches and fame and power away
To dream once more
Those bright dreams o'er—
"It is vain regret," sighs that old refrain,
For the days that never come back again.

Over the strings of my harp to-day
Floats a song for the dying year,
A song that thrills with an unshed tear
Like the sound of breakers far away—
How they beat and sob!
How they beat and throb!
And I hear that voice with its old refrain,
For the days that never come back again.

WINSOME'S ELOPEMENT.

CHAPTER I.

"Miss Ben, miss! An' Miss Tom, ma'am! Judge Spencer am 'lightin' down at de gate," said Aunt Taffy, poking her head in at the door of the sitting-room where the two ladies of the house, the widowed Mrs. Canning, and her youngest sister, Miss Benjamina Tudor, were sitting. "He drivin' his black horses, an' he all spruced up like he gwine to a weddin'. He sartinly do look nice!"

Mrs. Canning, formerly Miss Thomasina Tudor, but destined never to be called any thing but "Miss Tom" by old Taffy, merely smiled and nodded. She sat, trim and tidy, near the window, and had a pretty piece of embroidery in the frame before her. Her dress was of the deepest mourning, and on her head she wore a tiny widow's cap.

Miss Benjamina, however, was much more fluttered. She was lying at length on the lounge, amidst a multitude of pillows, the big silver pin had dropped out of her hair, her slippers were on the floor, her muslin dress, with its lace ruffles, was decidedly rumpled.

"The judge at this time in the morning!" she cried, tossing upon the table the novel she had been devouring. "Oh, dear me! Come here, Taffy! Quick! Put on my slippers! Now twist my hair. high! That's right! How awfully my skirt is mussed! Sister Tom, look at me, do! Do I look fit to be seen?"

"Well," said the widow, laughing softly, "you do not seem to be much more in need of ironing out than you usually do of a morning, Sister Ben; but if you will insist on always sprawling when you read, you can never expect to look neat. No one who cares about her looks can sprawl in anything but a wrapper; and a wrapper should never be worn outside of a lady's own room."

"'Sprawl!' What a coarse expression, Sister Tom!" pouted Miss Ben. "Of course I like to lounge when I read. I haven't lived ten years in Boston, and like to take comfort in feeling like I swallowed a ramrod. We all enjoy our lives; you all enjoy being martyrs, I think;"—but there she paused, with a contrite expression stealing over her face; for Thomasina, after ten years of happy married life up North, had come home a widow, and the jest that Sister Tom was a Boston lady was not to be uttered now;—"I'd like to be as trim as you are, Tom," she said, "but it isn't in me. I'm lazy by nature, and when I'm reading I forget everything else. You always were as neat as a new pin when we were children, and poor mamma and old Tabby had to tie my shoe-strings and knot my sashes twenty times a day."

"You see, I'm a fright if I'm not primmed up, Sister Ben, and you are pretty any way they find you," the widow answered, and so they had made it up by the time the judge appeared at the door, bowing and smiling, as it seemed to Miss Ben that only he could bow and smile.

Judge Spencer certainly was very handsome. His eyes were bright and black, and his cheeks rosy, though his hair was white. He had a splendid white moustache, and a full firm chin with a cleft in it, broad shoulders, and an upright carriage. He always dressed well. To-day, as Taffy had declared, he was unusually spruce, a rose in his buttonhole, and a diamond at his throat, new gloves, patent-leather boots.

"Good morning, Mistress Canning and Miss Benjamina," he said. "Pardon my intrusion at this early hour. I hope I do not interrupt you, ladies."

"Judge Spencer is welcome at any hour," said the widow, extending her hand.

"Thank you, Mistress Canning," he replied bending over it.

"And now he has discovered just how great a dowdy I can be," said Benjamina, laughing.

The judge thrust his left hand into his bosom, and gracefully waved the other in the direction of the speaker. Never did he miss the opportunity of making a quotation from the poets, and here was a fine one.

"Miss Benjamina," he said, "permit me to remark, with the poet Cowper:—

"'A sweet disorder in the dress,
Kindles in clothes attractiveness;
A lawn about the shoulders thrown
Into a fine distraction,
Does more bewich me than when art
Is too precise in every part.'"

He ended with a bow, and sank into the rocker Taffy had pushed forward for him.

One well acquainted with Cowper will notice how delicately he had altered one word and omitted several lines, that not too much of the old style might remain for the delicacy of his listeners.

Miss Benjamina gave him a lovely smile by way of thanks.

Mrs. Canning said sweetly:—

"After that, if I were Benjamina, I would never be tidy again."

And the latter young lady having abandoned her lounge for a rocker, all three swayed to and fro with long, slow sweeps. Taffy had handed the judge a great palmleaf, Miss Ben fluttered a little Japanese trifle, the color of a redbird's wing, and a large black fan waved to and fro in the widow's tiny hand, as they conversed.

"I came to ask a favor, ladies," said the judge. "I had the honor, yesterday, to receive an invitation to a supper given in order to introduce your niece, Miss Winsome, to your friends and neighbors; an occasion which will naturally be a most delightful one, as all your parties are, ladies, without exception."

"You are very kind to say so, Judge Spencer," said Mrs. Canning.

"I shall look forward to the evening, even when busy with the dull details of the law," said the judge. "Meanwhile, I must feel compassion for those who are not bidden, and I have in my office a young gentleman, whom I should be very glad to bring with me, if I might venture to do so; a card for him would be a favor to myself."

"Any friend of yours is welcome, Judge Spencer," said Mrs. Cannon. "I will forward a card to the gentleman, to your care, unless you will trouble yourself with it, now."

"May I have it now?" said the judge. "You are very kind. The gentleman is Mr. Jack Sylvestre. He is a young but promising lawyer. I have taken him under my wing, and intend to advance his interests. He is a young man of refinement and culture. He is sure to succeed. He is very handsome; he resembles his mother, who was once the belle of Prince Edward County, and I think you will be sure to find him an acquisition to your circle."

"We shall be delighted to know him," said the widow, returning from the old-fashioned escritoire at which she penned the solicited invitation for Mr. Sylvestre.

Now he arose to take it from her hand, and utter more acknowledgments; then they subsided into their rocking chairs once more.

The large, low-hung, wainscoted room, with its long windows opening north and west upon vine-clad verandas, its cane furniture, its cool matting, its many cushions and table-scarfs of pale blue, and full of the perfume of the roses and magnolias with which six great vases were laden, was very tempting that warm morning.

"When, may I ask, do you expect Miss Winsome?" inquired the judge.

"To-morrow," replied Mrs. Canning. "Brother will go to Norfolk to meet her; she preferred the boat; she is fond of the water, and she will be placed in charge of a lady coming south. She wrote us," said Mrs. Canning with a laugh, "that a Vassar girl could take care of herself, even though she were to travel around the world. I hope they have not made her unfeminine."

"Our lovely Winsome unfeminine! Impossible!" said the judge. "What an exquisite child she was!"

"She is eighteen now; just imagine it!" cried Miss Benjamina. "Brother is very fond of her. He has missed her greatly, but he promised poor sister-in-law to have her daughter educated at Vassar. She did not think a girl could be properly educated anywhere but at Vassar."

"We are all glad that she is about to return to us," said the judge. At this moment, a tempting tinkling was heard; Taffy entered, bringing a tray on which were glasses of a sort of sherbet of raspberry juice, ice, and sugar.

The judge did not decline this refreshment; all partook. The striking of the clock in the hall gave the judge an opportunity for another quotation.

"So late! Is it possible?" he cried; then the verses fell from his tongue:—

"'Too late I've stayed: forgive the crime;
Unheeded flew the hours.
So softly falls the foot of time,
That only treads on flowers.'"

And thus he made a striking exit.

Why did Miss Ben look after him so wistfully? Why did she sigh softly, so that her widowed sister should not hear her?

I will tell you, dear reader, only you must keep it to yourself:—

For years people had wondered why Miss Benjamina Tudor, so very, very handsome, so charming, so much sought after, still remained single at thirty. She had been a belle; she was still admired by every one. Could it be that she was averse to the state of wedlock; had resolved on spinsterhood, they asked each other. But indeed, this was not the case. Judge Spencer was twenty years her senior, but since her girlhood she had thought him the king of men. She liked him too much to like any one else. No one guessed the truth; neither Sister Thomasina nor Brother Archibald; no one, unless it was Taffy; good old Taffy, who had nursed her Miss Ben and her Miss Tom, and was, as she said, "next nearest to 'em except their ma, when she was livin'."

CHAPTER II.

What a flutter there was in the house next day! Every ear was strained to catch the whistle of the train; the coachman was off with the landau an hour before there was any need of starting. Mrs. Canning went up into the tower with an opera glass. Taffy's red hand-kerchief and feather duster were visible at every window in the house in turn; the fence was adorned by the figures of the offspring of Sue, Liza, and Jennie, all in checked gingham of one pattern and one size, so that while some were covered from neck to heels, others appeared costumed for the ballet.

Though "Massa Archy" paid wages now, he still considered it his duty to provide garments for his kitchen cabinet, and Aunt Taffy cut them all by one paper pattern, which she kept for what she called "de chillun's coats"; and as the servants felt that Massa Archy was liberal, they made no objection, but meekly added skirts or pantaloons to the wardrobe of their children in the winter season, and in the summer took what fate and Aunt Taffy provided with a meek "Thankee, ma'am."

What a day it was! The sun shone, the birds sang, the flowers in the garden seemed gayer than ever. Miss Ben, who forbade herself to lounge that day, walked up and down with a pink parasol over her head; and everybody consulted the clock continually.

At last the landua appeared at the top of the hill, a handkerchief waved, the driver snapped his whip, and the horses reached the gate in grand style.

Mr. Archibald Tudor descended with much stateliness, his long waving hair and wide-brimmed hat giving his head the effect of an old Spanish portrait, and offered his hand to his daughter, tall, slender, and golden-haired; and the air was full of exclamations:—

"Winnse—our little Winnse—grown so tall!"

"Oh, Winsome, darling!"

"Dat yar our all's Miss Win!"

And the higher voice with the Northern accent:—

"Oh, Aunt Ben! Just as lovely as ever! Dear—dear Aunt Tom—ah! and to think what you have been through! Why, Taffy, you blessed old Taffy; how glad I am to get home;—oh, how glad! How nice it all is! How are you, girls and boys! Bless the little pickaninnies; what a crowd of them!"

And Winsome Tudor was hurried into the house amidst tears, laughter, kisses and hurrahs.

"Just the same girl after all, when you have looked at her a little while," said the proud father. "And her mother's very image, as I always knew she would be."

It was a very sensible, wholesome sort of girl who had come home to the Tudor plantation, and an unusually handsome one. She was amiable, too, though she had the courage of her opinions, but she was Vassar all over, and Vassar is not the least bit south. In the next two or three days she startled her aunts considerably by laughing at the idea of waiting until her father could offer her protection before she went to the village, or the water fall—by carrying things up and down stairs for herself, brushing her own hair, stooping to pick up her own handkerchief, and helping her father on with his coat.

"We all expect our gentlemen to be attentive to us," said Miss Ben, gently; "it isn't thought elegant to wait on them."

"Oh, it's not a matter of sex—being helpful to one another," Winsome said. "We should all be that always, and I am used to doing things. I cannot be idle."

"It is very amiable, but like a boy," Aunt Ben whispered to Aunt Tom.

"Oh, there are so many like that in Boston," Aunt Tom replied.

However, by the night of the supper, they were quite used to what they called "her Vassar ways," and were delighted to see her sketches—"like those of a real artist," Aunt Tom said—and to hear how well she played.

"The judge will be delighted with your voice," Aunt Tom said. "You remember the judge?"

"A very nice sort of old gentleman," Winsome commented.

Aunt Ben gave her a look.

"Well, now what have I done?" queried Winsome. But no one informed her.

"She is unappreciative," Miss Ben though.

The two ladies had taken some time in dressing, and not only Taffy but Liza had been called to their aid. Winsome was ready long before they were, and had dressed herself.

"She too plain, Miss Tom," Taffy whispered. "She isn't got a flower on—nor no jewelry."

And Mrs. Canning captured her niece, and, by dint of a yard of tulle and a cluster of pink roses, made her much more charming.

"And you must have my turquoise set, my dear," she said "I can't wear them, now. Why haven't you your ears bored?"

"It is so barbarous to bore one's ears!" Winsome cried. But she let her aunt put the necklack about her neck, and the pin in her tulle drapery, and the bracelets on her arms.

Aunt Benjamina, in white silk and rubies, was beautiful, and her dark eyes glowed, and her color deepened. Was not Judge Spencer coming! He of whom Winsome had spoken as a "rather nice old gentleman," but who to her was everything that was admirable.

"What made th' assembly shine?
Robin Adair."

He was there at last, and with him came the young lawyer for whom he had begged the invitation. Mr. Jack Sylvestre was introduced, and shortly fell into animated conversation with Miss Winsome, saw her in to supper, turned her music when she sang, and finally wandered away with her into the moon-lit garden.

Winsome had been used, thus far, to looking upon young men with some contempt. She thought herself unromantic, and but for the sentiments of her family, would surely have studied law or medicine herself, and felt sure that she could outdo any youthful practitioner of the other sex. But during this rose-scented, moon-lit ramble, she suddenly realized that there was something very nice in young men, after all, when they were nice. She was astonished to find herself dimpling and blushing and thrilling with a sweet shyness, and to feel her hand really tremble when Jack took it in his, to guide her down a sloping path.

As for the young man his emotions were indescribable. He declared to himself that such an angel never before walked the earth, and that out of paradise there could be no such hours as those of that delicious evening. In fact, the two fell in love at first sight, and his eyes told the tale before they parted.

That occasion over, he made others for seeing her. They met much oftener than any one knew. At the end of three weeks he had told her all he felt. Before a month was over they were engaged, and Jack had promised Winsome not to speak of the fact until she gave him permission.

It was a sweet secret between them, and it never entered the Vassar girl's mind that any one would object to her choosing for herself in such a matter. She could understand that cases might occur in which a young lady's choice might not please her family, and arguments might ensue; but she did not apprehend any thing of this sort. Her father and her aunts had spoken of Jack Sylvestre as a very agreeable young man. They offered him their hospitality. They would approve entirely. And so she walked with Jack, and climbed hills with him, and boated with him.

It was proper for a lady always to be protected by a gentleman; if she had no brother, by some one's else brother.

Miss Ben and Mrs. Canning were rather relieved to think that she did not insist on doing what the latter called "strammanding about by herself." Ben never could think where Sister Tom picked up some of her words.

Meanwhile, the judge came oftener than ever to see his friends, and went into estacies over the charms and accomplishments of "Miss Winsome." And Miss Benjamina was a little graver than she was wont to be, and Taffy found tear-soaked handkerchiefs under her pillow, and shook her turbaned head over them. And an unsuspected cloud was gathering over the heads of Jack and Winnie, who would not see it until it burst.

(Concluded next week.)

MET A FRIEND.

His face beamed with surprise and pleasure as on entering the great store he saw a friendly figure and features with which he was familiar confront him just within the door.

"I'm right glad to see you," he said, shifting the satchel he carried from his right arm to his left, and he was about to grasp the hand extended to him when a clerk touched him on the shoulder and inquired:

"What department, sir?"

"Department?" queried the old man, turning around, "am I in the departments? I reckoned it were only in Wash—"

"This is the dress goods and mantle department," said the clerk blandly.

"Well, young man, I ain't lookin' for dress goods, and I dunno as we want another mantel, seein' as we have only one clock, and I made a shelf for that myself. I want a pair of suspenders if so be you keep them. But first I want to speak to my friend here."

He turned about and confronted the smiling face of his friend.

"I don't seem able to name you," he said regretfully; "it's kind of queer, too, when I know you by sight as well as I do myself—"

"Suspenders this way, in the gentlemen's furnishing department," here interrupted the clerk.

"That's all right, young man; I don't keer which way they are there. I know how I want them, and I ain't agoin' to change my style of wearin' suspenders at my age. Now my friend here—"

He extended his hand expecting to grasp that of his friend, but his knuckles struck a cold, bare expanse of lookingglass let into the wall. Then he saw the face of the clerk over his shoulder, and he knew he had been fooled, and had mistaken the resemblance of himself for an old friend. And he meekly followed the clerk, bought a pair of suspenders, and walked out of the "department."

"I guess I'll have a gardeen 'pinted fore I come to town agin," he remarked humbly as he left.—Detroit Free Press.

"Do you pretend to have as good judgment as I have?" exclaimed an enraged woman to her husband. "Well, no," he replied slowly. "Our choice of partners for life shows that my judgment is not to be compared with yours."—Spare Moments.

DEATH OF ALVIN A. GAGE OF MONSON.

Like a bolt from a clear sky came to Monson last Friday afternoon an unprecedented shock in the instantaneous death of Alvin A. Gage, chairman of the board of selectmen, by a fall in his house. The house was being repaired internally, and Mr. Gage was painting in the front hall. His sister, who lived with him, was in the room adjoining with the door closed, but heard Mr. Gage make an exclamation, which was followed immediately by a crash, and rushing to the door found him lying on the floor, dead, the pneumo-gastric nerve having been severed by the shock of the fall, and death being instantaneous. Just how the accident occurred will never be known, but beside Mr. Gage's body was a wooden chair with a part of one side of the seat broken, and it is surmised that while standing on it the chair broke and caused his fall.

The career of Mr. Gage was no ordinary one, and well illustrates what a poor boy with energy and pluck can do. Born in Ellington, Ct., Oct. 2d, 1841, he moved with his father's family to Woodstock, and thence at the age of 15 years to Monson. He had attended the common schools while in Woodstock, and on arriving in Monson in 1856, for a brief period was a member of Monson Academy. He soon entered the employ of the Hampden Woolen Co., but when the call of his country came in 1861 Mr. Gage's natural military nature would not permit him long to delay, and on September 20 of that year he enlisted in Company I, Twenty-seventh regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers. He was a soldier every inch. Decisive, alert, active, efficient, painstaking and prompt in the discharge of every duty, he soon won the confidence and respect of his superior officers and was made color corporal. At Roanoke, Newbern, Kingston, Whitehall and Goldsboro in North Carolina, and Mary Dunn's farm in Virginia, he carried the colors of the Twenty-seventh to victory; and at Drury's Bluff only surrendered them when a Rebel officer pointed a pistol at his head and told him to stop stuffing those colors into his pocket and give them to him, or he would blow his brains out. We next find him in Libby prison. Having made a list of the privates of the Twenty-seventh captured at Drury's Bluff, 238 in number, he slipped the list up through a crack in the floor to Lieutenant Skinner in the room above, who gave him back a list of the nine officers who were there confined. From Libby he was sent to Andersonville prison, and was there on that eventful day in July, 1864, when during a terrific shower, a kindly Providence opened up a spring of fine sparkling water, sufficient to quench the thirst of 30,000 famished, emaciated, ragged and enfeebled Union prisoners, who would have had only seventeen square feet per man had the twelve acres of hard land in which they were enclosed been equally divided. From Andersonville Mr. Gage was transferred to Savannah, and thence to Millen, thence back to Savannah, from which prison he was exchanged October 19, 1864. When he arrived within the Union lines, emaciated, unable to pass the gang plank without assistance, his body disfigured with numerous ulcers from scurvy, he weighed only ninety-six pounds, as compared with 160 pounds when captured at Drury's Bluff five months previous. Mr. Gage had a long and tedious convalescence from the effect of prison life, but when sufficiently recruited joined his regiment in North Carolina, and was honorably discharged with his regiment June 26, 1865, the rebellion having collapsed and the services of the citizen soldiers being no longer needed.

Returning from the army he was for eighteen months in the employ of Mr. Wilkinson at Springfield. While in Springfield he was an active member of the Soldiers' union. From Springfield he went to Monson and was for a time in the employ of E. E. Towne. Upon the death of John Newton he purchased his store and entered business for himself. Of this, as of everything else he undertook, he made a success. In 1874, the business being prosperous, he associated with him his brother, C. M. Gage. In 1881 Mr. Gage became associated with R. M. Reynolds in the manufacture of straw goods, in which he continued till 1892. In this factory he succeeded in endearing the employes to him, and they regretted exceedingly when the firm dissolved by limitation.

The winter of 1893 Mr. Gage served the Ninth Hampden district satisfactorily in the state Legislature. The previous season he had been a leading candidate for the nomination of state senator, and had he been nominated, the election of 1893 showed very decisively that his popularity would have saved the district to the Republicans. For several years he served as town clerk, and in 1893 was elected for the third time chairman of the board of selectmen of Monson, and in 1894 again elected for a fourth term. Mr. Gage was a great force this year in pushing the water supply system for Monson, and had he lived he would have been elected one of the water commissioners at the town meeting held yesterday.

Mr. Gage was an active and prominent Mason, having served as district deputy, and being a past master of Day Spring lodge, as well as a royal arch Mason. He was one of the charter members of Marcus Keep post of the Grand Army, and its first commander, and was vice president of the 27th Mass. Regiment Association from its formation to his death. Two weeks ago he was made a member of the board of administration of the department of Massachusetts, a very distinguished honor. He was also a charter member of the Monson free library, and has been its vice president since its incorporation. He was also a trustee of the Monson savings bank. For twenty-five years he has been a wheel horse, and had a hand in most of the enterprises for the good of Monson. Who does not remember how splendidly he marshalled the 1600 soldiers, artillery men and veterans, when the Holmes

John Lage of the School for Christian Workers at Springfield, formerly of Palmer, has been spending the week in town.

P. J. Cashman of Palmer, who has been employed by R. F. Hawkins of Springfield, has left there and gone to Northampton.

The Massachusetts Railroad commissioners passed over the Boston and Albany road and branches yesterday, on a tour of inspection.

Mrs. H. W. Pope and son of Great Falls, N. H., formerly of Palmer, spent Sunday and the first of the week with Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Tuthill.

The intermediate circle of King's Daughters will have a picnic a week from to-morrow with Miss Bessie Moore at her home at Blanchardville.

The Betts Fencing Co. has leased the barn of J. S. Loomis on South Main street for the manufacture of fencing, and the power will probably be a water motor.

George Eastman, who has been employed by W. H. Hitchcock for nearly a year, has left town on account of his wife's health, and is succeeded by W. A. Blakesley, a licensed plumber.

Pleasant street, from Church street east, is being coated with cracked stone, which will greatly improve that thoroughfare, as the section which is being covered is always exceedingly muddy in wet weather.

The fire alarm apparatus is still attached to the bell in the Universalist church tower, and will not be moved until next week, on account of the inability of the men who are to do the work to come to Palmer sooner.

Hunting's old-fashioned one-ring circus, with the old admission of 25 cents, will exhibit on the Converse lot back of Park street to-morrow afternoon and evening, and is said to be one of best of the kind on the road.

Mrs. S. D. Thorpe and Mrs. Austin Dutton of Northampton, Mrs. A. R. Chapin of Rockville, Ct., also Mrs. M. E. Bradley, Ella Foster and C. E. Rempert of Springfield spent Wednesday with Mrs. E. N. Fay and family.

The case of R. J. Connors for forgery came up in the district court this morning and was nolle prossed, the court having no jurisdiction in the matter, as the check which it is claimed he forged was given in Brighton.

The Ladies' Social Union of St. Paul's Universalist church will give their annual strawberry festival next Tuesday evening, followed by a entertainment, at which the drama, "Courtship Under Difficulties," will be presented.

The special meetings at the People's church have been continued every evening this week except Wednesday, and there will be meetings this and to-morrow evenings, with help from outside. These services have been well attended.

G. M. Atkins has a force of men at work on the Gibbs crossing at Ware, where the highway is to pass under the tracks and do away with a dangerous grade crossing. The contract for the work was taken from the Boston and Maine railroad.

Work on Holden's block is still delayed by the non-arrival of the iron front, the iron for which the manufacturers say they are unable to get from the mills in Pennsylvania, which are shut down for lack of fuel on account of the strike among the coal miners.

Fred Adams had on exhibition Wednesday morning the best trout of the season thus far. One weighed 2¼ pounds, another 1 pound and 11 ounces, and another 1 pound and 10 ounces. They were caught yesterday afternoon by Mr. Adams and a friend.

New posts for holding the semaphor signals at the crossing of the Boston and Albany and New London Northern railroad tracks have been put in this week, the old ones having rotted off at the ground after having been in position nearly nine years.

The Quaboag Historical Circle will hold its last meeting for this season this evening, when Rev. F. E. Jenkins will present a paper on "The Influences of New England on the Rest of the Country." Mrs. H. M. Anger will read the selections of the Round Table.

The horse and carriage belonging to Milo Booth of Brimfield, which was hitched by itself at Forest Lake Wednesday evening, were stolen between 10 and 11 o'clock, but were found yesterday forenoon by Deputy Sheriff Northrop at Ware. The thief has not yet been captured.

The county commissioners will view the proposed new road, which the citizens of Brimfield ask to have built for them from a point on the present highway just east of the Cooley Crossing bridge over the Quaboag river, along the south side of the river to a point on the Monson road near the Nelson house at Tenneyville, June 29th.

Henry Sherman and sister, former residents of Palmer on the farm above the carpet mill now occupied by Edward Carey, then known as the Sherman farm, were in town Wednesday, the guests of Judge and Mrs. George Robinson. They are now residing in Colorado. Mr. Sherman's parents were closely identified with much of the history of Palmer 100 years ago.

A large crowd, considering the attractions elsewhere, attended the opening at Forest Lake Gardens Wednesday, and amused themselves with boating, bowling, roller skating, etc. Ware and Warren got into a difference of opinion at one time which threatened at least bloody noses for some of the participants, but the affair was finally smoothed over and nothing serious occurred.

The graduating exercises of the Palmer high school will occur on the 28th, and will be of the same order as last year, the essays being dispensed with, and instead the class and the public listening to an address, which will be given this year by Principal Jacobus of the Springfield high school. This will be in Memorial Hall in the afternoon, and in the evening the graduating class will give the usual reception.

The carpet mill will start up next week, and an advertisement appears in another column for weavers, creelers and spoolers for Brussels carpets. It is understood that the wages will not be as high as formerly, but after nearly a year of idleness the employes will not be likely to kick over any reasonable cut; they will be very foolish if they do. The announcement that the mill is to start will be good news to many, both employes and merchants, and all hope that the next shut-down will be years in the future.

The Order of the Eastern Star will celebrate its first anniversary next Wednesday evening by the initiation of two new members, which will be followed by a collation. The members have reason to be proud of the growth of the order, 25 new members having been added during the year it has been in existence, and the members having become so proficient in the work of the ritual and the conducting of business as to win high encomiums from the supreme officers. The principal officers of the chapter are: W. M., Miss Helen Robinson; W. P., C. E. Fuller; W. A. M., Mrs. C. F. Grosvenor; secretary, Mrs. E. L. Davis; treasurer, Mrs. F. A. Royce.

Edward Carroll was before the district court yesterday morning charged with trespassing on the land of the Forest Lake Co. at Forest Lake. Carroll attempted to set up a stand for the sale of goods near the fence about the Forest Lake Co's. property, and when told that he was trespassing refused to move. It seems that the company, in order to protect itself against such peddlers, with the knowledge and consent of the adjoining property owners set the fence about its property some four feet inside the true line, so that venders who wished to establish themselves in business there could not do so to advantage. The case will come up for a hearing the 9th.

The service at the Congregational church next Sunday evening has been arranged especially for elderly people, and will be held at 5 o'clock. A chorus choir will sing such good old pieces as "Jerusalem, My Glorious Home," "Invitation," "Lenox," "Silver Street," and "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," while the quartette will sing "The Dearest Place of Earth to Me is Home." A committee consisting of O. P. Allen, G. H. Hastings and J. B. Shaw has been appointed to arrange for taking to the service and carrying home any who live at a distance and are unprovided with transportation, and all such who wish to be carried should notify the committee.

The Young Men's Library Association held a meeting Monday evening, at which it was voted to give the Odd Fellows a deed to the strip of land owned by the association on the west side of Central street between the street and the land which the Odd Fellows have agreed to buy of the Feeney estate for their building, with the provision that when the land ceases to be used for purposes of the order it shall revert to the library association. The strip in question is about four feet wide on Pleasant street, and runs to a point at the end toward Main street, being deeded to the association by M.W. French, who did so that it might control the erection of undesirable buildings opposite the memorial building, a blacksmith shop and other such structures having been contemplated at various times. The Feeney heirs, however, claim that no such strip exists, that the surveys fail to locate it. The library association, however, could have no objection to such a building as the Odd Fellows propose to erect, and so voted to give the deed.

The weather on Wednesday was as fine as could be asked for the observance of Memorial Day, much to the gratification of those who were interested in the programme, which was carried out as planned. The Grand Army veterans met at the hall on Central street in the morning, and shortly after 8 o'clock, accompanied by the Thorndike band and escorted by a brigade of boys from the state primary school, marched through Main street to the Point of Rocks, where with the quartette and invited guests carriages were taken for the cemeteries at Three Rivers, Four Corners and Thorndike, where the graves of fallen comrades were decorated with flowers arranged by the Woman's Relief Corps. The cemetery in this village was reached about 11.15, where the ceremonies were witnessed by a large number, including a delegation from the state primary school, which came down expressly for the occasion. Those who had taken part in the affairs of the morning then repaired to the Grand Army hall, where they were served with dinner by the Woman's Relief Corps. At 2 in the afternoon the hall was filled with those who gathered to hear the address of Rev. F. E. Jenkins, which by request will be given in full next week.

R. in the forenoon, others went to Ware to attend the ball games and horse racing, while Forest Lake drew the usual crowd from this place.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, May 30, 1894.

An incident at the state house shows how foolish labor agitators deceive silly laboring people. For several days there has been a strike on the part of the girls who work in the silk mills at Newton Upper Falls. Whether or not they had a just cause is not material to subsequent events. But a woman agitator, Mrs. Charlotte Smith, who was prominent when Morrison I. Swift's crowd came to the state house, put herself in connection with them and tried to persuade them to parade in Boston streets after a brass band and then to call on Gov. Greenhalge at the state house. They did not parade, but they did come up in the rain and found that the governor was out. He could have done nothing if he had been in, and they went home wet and disgusted with the woman who had led them their wild goose chase.

The anti-stock-watering bills are now in such shape that they are certain to pass, and this corporation legislation will stand as one of the conspicuous features of the legislation of this session, probably the most conspicuous to people of other states.

Disputing Democrats let much light into Boston politics on the caucus bill. The power of the Democratic machine and of "Mr. P. Maguire" was shown by the way in which Messrs. Hoar and J. E. Hayes of Boston defended party organization and the necessity of strict discipline, if success is to be attained in party politics. But two Democrats who had run independently took a bold stand for the men who had supported them. Mr. Malone of Greenfield and other Republicans took a liberal view, and hereafter a man can vote in the caucus of his own party, even if he does sometimes scratch one of the candidates.

Though there are rumors of improper influence in the first vote on the Bell Telephone bill, yet it is by no means certain that they are well founded, or that, if so, that influence was decisive. One of the most upright senators, thoroughly above suspicion, tells me that he has gone about as far as he can in this anti-corporation legislation, and that there is sure to be a reaction. There was doubtless great effort made for the bill, and if anything improper was done I hope it will be brought out.

For the third time the House has defeated the scheme to distribute the corporation and bank tax among the cities and towns in proportion to their average school attendance, and it is a fair prediction that it will not be proposed again for several years. The nature of the grab game was pretty clearly revealed by the first vote in the House when, with hardly an exception, the members voted according as their places would gain or lose by the bill. Naturally that coincidence opened the eyes of some fairminded men, and when the bill came up again it was considered more on its merits. At first, by 74 to 103, the House refused to reject the bill. On Monday it was rejected by 76 to 65, and Tuesday, by 73 to 88, they refused to reconsider the rejection.

As clear a speech as any was that by Mr. Utley of Brookline against the bill. He showed that the taxes are assessed on the property of the shareholders, not on the franchises of the corporations, as had been argued and that on account of the resident ownership of corporation and bank shares, the cities and towns have to pay a larger state tax than they otherwise would. This being the case, it was a great injustice to force the town to pay part of the school bills of towns where no shareholders reside. It was argued by another member that one town might as well ask another, by act of Legislature, to pay part of its road tax. The inequalities in the bill, taking money from some of the poor country towns and giving it to such cities as Cambridge, Lowell and Fall River, were so striking as to lead to the defeat of the scheme.

A good deal is being said just now about corrupt influences in the Legislature, but these rumors must always be taken with great caution. I have personally inquired into some charges and found that they had been inflated extremely, and that there was no reason for the sensation that was caused. But there are presumably corrupt men in the Legislature, and it is well that the public mind is sensitive upon the matter. The observer at the state house cannot feel that confidence in this House which was earned by the House of 1893, but not a thing has yet come to a head where it can be mentioned. The House is industrious, and is doing all it can to finish soon. It has held two night sessions, and the experience ought to prevent any further effort in that direction. Men are not in the mood to work in the evening, after a day's work by daylight, and if they force themselves the work of that night and of the next day suffers.

The committee on the Boston contested election case has made its report, finding great evidence of corruption, but not enough to warrant them to report that the sitting members should be arrested. In one of the committee rooms are displayed the fraudulent ballots. They carry their own proof of fraud. They are usually straight Republican ballots with the names of the Republican candidates all down the street properly checked. The representative district has two representatives, and in several cases besides the two marks for the Republicans there is a mark for one of the Democratic candidates, thus making void the whole vote for representative. Evidence taken by the committee shows fraudulent registration of minors, voting upon the names of those who were absent, voting upon the names of men who afterward found that they were thus deprived of their rightful vote, and other things of equal criminal character. Gross outrages have been perpetrated, and the offenders ought to be punished as severely as those of Gravesend. It is found that the Australian ballot is not proof against fraud, if there are dishonest election officers. These votes were plainly tampered with after they went into the hands of the officials. It is expected that this matter will develop into one of the most interesting of the session. Many people are disposed to say that the sitting members should be unseated. Politics will enter into the matter greatly. Of the seven members of the committee on elections, five Republicans and one Democrat are against unseating the sitting members, while one Republican dissents. Some fear the consequences to the Republican party if it undertakes to oust members whose title cannot be plainly proven fraudulent, while others believe that the party will make a great mistake if it fails to do all in its power to punish frauds in elections.

Also winner of second money at N. E. Breeders meeting at Boston, Mass., and trotted a trial as a two-year-old less than 2.25. The dam of Alcone, "Lady Hill," is bred like Electioneer, being out of a daughter of Harry Clay 45, and sired by Hambletonian 10. Lady Hill produced Sam Hill 2.25½, and Alcone 2.31½. Alcone at 7 years of age had two 4 year olds with records 2.22½, 2.21½, made in 1893.

Being anxious to have a good showing of colts by "Success" in 1895, I will make his service fee for 1894 $15—five of which must be paid at time of service.

MONSON.

Funeral of Alvin A. Gage.

The funeral of Selectman Alvin A. Gage, whose death occurred so suddenly last Friday afternoon, was held at his late residence Monday afternoon at 2.30, and because of the high esteem with which the deceased was regarded a large number, fully 600, of the townspeople and acquaintances from abroad, gathered to pay their last respects to the one who had won and held their highest regard during his life among them. The mills and stores were closed, and all business suspended. Marcus Keep post of the Grand Army, and Day Spring lodge of Masons were present in a body, and there were also in attendance a delegation from Hampden chapter of Royal Arch Masons of Palmer, of which Mr. Gage was a member, prominent Masons from Springfield, and the officers of the Department of Mass., G. A. R., and of the 27th Regiment Association. In the room which contained the casket the mantel at the back was banked with hawthorn, while beautiful and costly floral gifts were present in large numbers. The Grand Army post sent a badge of the order, the eagle being constructed of white immortelles and pansies, the crossed swords of purple immortelles, the flag of red roses and white pinks with the field of blue and the stars of white immortelles, and the star below of white pinks; the Department of Mass., G. A. R., sent a pillow of red immortelles with a panel of purple bordered with yellow, with the letter C in the center; from the Masons there was the square and compass of the order, the compass LaFrance roses and maiden-hair ferns and the square white pinks edged with pansies; from the Woman's Relief Corps there was a basket of Marechal Neil roses; besides these there were a pillow of roses, pinks and pansies, a crescent of pansies, a wreath of pink and yellow roseses, pansies and pinks, a basket of LaFrance roses, a large bunch of Waterville roses, lilies of the valley and maiden-hair ferns from relatives and friends; the inmates of the town farm sent an anchor of swamp pinks and wild geraniums, bordered with evergreen, and a basket of the same, Mr. Gage in his capacity as a town official having had much to do with these people and having endeared himself to them in many ways. Only a small portion of the people could enter the house, so the remainder stood about the grounds, while Rev. W. H. Marble of the Methodist church, standing in the front door, spoke as follows:

"The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble; the name of the God of Jacob defend thee. Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion."—PSALM XX.

Beloved friends, it is with sad hearts we come into the presence of these solemnities wrought by the decease of this noble brother and affectionate husband. His loss to us the entire people of this place feel most keenly, especially this family, who loved him and whom he loved and shared with in the sweet sanctities of home; the circle within which our brother's life and character were better known and more perfectly developed than anywhere else. However frequently we may have been in the funeral procession or stood by the open grave, or looked upon the beloved forms of our dear departed loved ones, the forms which held the jewel, the life and character of our friends—I say however frequent such scenes, there is always an indescribable solemnity about it; a solemnity which is in part explained by the nature of this separation, a separation which is absolute so far as any physical sense can measure. "For the eye that hath seen me shall see me no more."

Whenever we contemplate this event, whenever we look upon the masterpiece—the lifeless body we look upon it entirely from the standpoint of what death has wrought. What has it done? It has destroyed a wonderful organization, broken up a co-partnership between the spirit and the body. In doing this it has removed from you a living form, it has removed from you a loving presence; it has taken from public life one whom we thought we could not spare, one in the full strength and vigor of his manhood, one who was in the midst of great usefulness, one whom the town had elected as one of its selectmen; not only a loyal and aggressive citizen, but a considerate and affectionate brother, a loving, sincere and devoted husband.

The vacant seat, made vacant by the sudden departure of our brother, recalls and impresses his character and life upon us and speaks to us with a more tender and impressive voice than anything I may be able to say. I need not review his life and work to any fulsome extent. Many of you have been long r acquainted with him than myself, and some of you are better qualified to pass unto others a just, discriminate and truthful tribute to his memory. My confidence and esteem for him does prompt me to say, however, that the duties which were intrusted to him and which during his public career were discharged so acceptably and so well, have devolved upon his successors. We pray they may have his wisdom, patience and courage.

In our times when many think there is threatened an eclipse of faith, religious minds must be happy to recall the fact that our brother in his best manhood saw the power of a belief in God and realized the grandeur of the words "The Lord reigns, let the earth rejoice." He has showed us what will, honesty, industry, patriotism and exalted purposes can accomplish in this land of the free and home of the brave.

The people of this place mourn this day, not only because a man has died, but because a manly man has gone out from their midst,—one who will be greatly missed in the days that are to come. If you would be helped, any of you, to a knowledge of all that has moved out of that brave heart, of that patriotic heart, ask the early years when adverse winds assailed his bark; ask the days and nights of study; ask the schools where he was taught; ask the place where he worshipped; ask the legislative halls where he helped enact wise laws; ask the battlefields were he fought as a loyal soldier; ask the prisons where he suffered; ask the town of Monson, where he was crowned as Republicans crown their sons; ask this cottage, this beautiful home where he died. And out of the answers to all these questions you will find your confidence and esteem were not misplaced.

Rest then, dear brother; for thee there is no more morning, no more noon, no more night. This is the body, precious because of what it has been, of the service it has rendered, the mission it has fulfilled. He is a freed spirit. Dust to dust, and the spirit back to God.

I am glad it has been left for modern times to spell respect to the departed and comfort for the living in letters of floral gospel. These beautiful flowers which lie like a chaplet over the still heart, speak to us of God's providential care. They tell us that He who watches over the lilies and sees when each one is torn, He who watches over the sparrows and marks when each one falls, and who tells us we are of more value than many sparrows, will care for us. It is a part of our consolation to-day, as we sit half crushed in this presence, that we believe in God—in Christ—in a Being of infinite wisdom, power and goodness; one who is carrying this world in his arms up the stairway of progress to an issue grander than anything we can possibly dream—a Being who watches all our fortune, guards all our welfare, guides all our way. There is not an accident,—or what we call accident,—not an event, or mistake which can effect the character, happiness or destiny of the humblest of us, beneath God's notice or exempt from His control. His hand grasps and economizes for good all that can come to us.

"There is a Divinity that shapes our ends, Rough hew them as we will."

"Ill that God blesses is my good,
And unblessed good is ill;
And all is right that seems most wrong,
If it be His sweet will."

I look to-day through the mists which rise from the cold Jordan to the time and place where all wrongs shall be righted, all burdens lifted, and hard Providences made to appear wise and for our good.

I commend you, beloved friends, you whose hearts are so sorely riven, to the God of all grace, of all comfort, whose sweet promise goes with us through all the dark and stormy paths of life. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble; the God of Jacob defend thee. Send thee help from the sanctuary, and strengthen thee out of Zion."

Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Norcross sang "Abide With Me," and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and after all who wished had taken a last look at the face so dear to them the body was escorted to the cemetery by the Grand Army and Masons, where Rev. F. S. Hatch of the Congregational church addressed them:

Comrades of our departed friend, I have been asked to say a few words to you here under the open sky, beneath which your friendship with our brother began and grew. One could easily pass into language of personal eulogy, moved by a spirit of affection, but I will only remind you of certain soldierly qualities which continued to the end and won for him a distinct place in public service.

He was brave. His was a soldier's courage, and he had it always. It was displayed in the perils of battle when he was almost a boy in years and in the steady endurance of prison hardship. But in maturer life, when the blood glows cooler, this courage was quite as notable. In advocating good laws and in enforcing those the people had passed he was fearless, and while liable like all of us to mistake, no one could ever think of him as afraid to do what he believed to be his duty.

There was also a straight-forwardness in his methods which is essentially a soldier's virtue. He hated indirection. He never posed as a diplomat, and he would not have been skilled in the arts of diplomacy. While not impractical or disposed to attempt all the things that ought to be, he aimed directly at the end sought without evasions or subterfuge. Hence people trusted him and, whether agreeing or not with his positions, had no doubt either of his sincerity or his earnestness.

Fidelity is a soldier's virtue, and he had that; an honest fidelity to every public trust. The position of first selectman in a New England town is an office full of perplexity. On the one hand are men eagerly pressing their favorite schemes, and widows and orphans pleading for indulgence; on the other is the town demanding a strict fidelity to its interests. To hold the balance between these often conflicting pressures is no easy task. But our friend had done this so well that not even the oppositions naturally arising in connection with his official life even so much as suggested a single dishonest act in connection with his name. His honesty was not a mere outward attention to financial rectitude, but had reference to his intentions. It is in this respect that his administrative work was essentially honest and faithful.

He was also a true soldier in that he bore no malice to his foes. He nursed no grudges and when the debate was over it was over. These qualities are admired; there were others that led us on from liking to loving. Such qualities made the man dearer when he entered into relations of comradeship with you.

High courage, straightforward honesty and fidelity and generosity,—these qualities are in demand everywhere. And we cannot disguise the feeling that such work and such workers will be needed and used in other worlds than ours.

In such hope for all that was most dear in our friend's nature—that best part of the man which we call spirit—we lay his body, also dear, to peaceful sleep,

"While the stars burn, the moons increase,
And the great ages onward roll."

At St. Patrick's Catholic church last Sunday Rev. J. F. Lee spoke of Mr. Gage substantially as follows:

My dear brethren, I cannot and will not feel satisfied if a few words be not spoken such as the present moments call for. I refer to the loss which our entire community suffers in the death of a truly loyal citizen. It matters little what the opinions or judgment of others may be, I express my heartfelt sentiments that in the death of Mr. Gage we are bereft of a man whose sterling qualities commanded my admiration. It was my pleasure to meet him frequently as a public official and private citizen, and I must say in his official capacity he proved himself a man for the people, irrespective of race, color or creed. When documents were sent him antagonistic to our holy religion he knew full well, better, far better than these enemies of our country, authors of these documents, whose blood flowed in the same channel for the preservation of this country, and consigned their unconstitutional and worse than know nothing documents to the fire. "Monson will never permit anything of that description." These are his words. Our community, living in harmony and peace as one happy family, will miss the influence of Mr. Gage, whom I hope you will always hold in grateful remembrance.

The Town Votes to Put in a Water Supply.

There was only a small number of citizens present at the special town meeting yesterday afternoon. John P. Herlihy, Jr., was chosen moderator, and C. M. Gage clerk. On taking the chair and before proceeding with the business of the warrant Mr. Herlihy spoke as follows:

Fellow Citizens:—I take this chair to-day with a feeling of profound sorrow as I realize that one who so often filled this position with dignity, honor and usefulness to us all has suddenly been taken from us. The alert, active mind that formulated and prepared this warrant is at rest; and the eloquent lips that would have explained and advocated its provisions are mute and motionless. Ir, in his earnest and progressive activity, he sometimes disturbed the serenity of men of more conservative views, we all unite in loving testimony to the high character, the splendid ability and the sterling worth of our departed friend. In every walk of an eventful life, from the stern conflict of the great Rebellion down through all the years of peace that followed, Alvin A. Gage was every inch a man. Proudly do we declare him to have been one of the choicest products of our Christian civilization, a brave, earnest, incorruptible, patriotic American citizen, whose loss we deeply mourn.

The meeting was most harmonious throughout, not a dissenting voice being heard on any motion. For water commissioners A. D. Norcross for 3 years received 151 votes, E. F. Morris for 2 years 140 votes, R. M. Reynolds for 1 year 170 votes, and they will constitute the board of commissioners. The town voted to adopt a seal and to take the land upon which the water supply is located, near Conant's brook. The town also authorized the water commissioners to make contracts in behalf of the town, and authorized the issuing of $65,000 worth of 4 per cent bonds. The treasurer was also authorized to borrow money in anticipation of the sale of these bonds.

Valuable Herd of Cows Poisoned.

Rev. James Tufts met with a serious loss Wednesday night, when 11 of his herd of 15 cows were killed by poison, though just how is not definitely known. The animals were brought in from the pasture about 5 o'clock and milked, being given a feed of bran and salted. About 8 o'clock some of them were noticed to be sick, and they soon commenced to die, some within fifteen minutes after showing symptoms of sickness. Ten died that night and another the next morning. An examination was made and symptoms of poisoning which looked like arsenic found. A veterinary from Amherst and Prof. Stockbridge of the Agricultural College were called, and are making an analysis of the stomach of one of the animals. Left in the mangers were grains of what looked like salt, but which will probably prove to be saltpeter, as in one corner of the barn was a barrel containing a quantity which had been procured for fertilizing purposes, and it is probable that in some manner some of this was given the animals, although one has not been sick at all, and one which ate none of the feed of bran died. The loss is about $400. A subscription paper has been started among the citizens to reimburse Mr. Tufts for his loss.

Harry McMaster of Allston is the guest of his aunt, Mrs. A. A. Gage.

Charles Rood has moved his family to Enfield, where he has taken the position of overseer in a card room.

Mrs. E. B. and Miss Letha Potter are visiting friends in Worcester and Grafton. The many friends of Miss Potter hope she will return much improved in health.

The Monson Cycle Club enjoyed its first run Memorial Day, 27 numbers joining in a trip to Palmer. It is rumored that the half-mile record on the track at that place was broken.

Rev. C. B. Summer of Pomona, Cal., a former pastor of the Congregational church, has been spending the week in town and will occupy the pulpit at that church next Sunday.

Although coal has advanced 25 cents a ton in price, and will probably go higher soon, R. M. and Theo. Reynolds have made no advance in their prices, as will be seen by their advertisement in another column.

Rev. N. D. Parsons of the Baptist church at Hampden has invited the Grand Army post and Woman's Relief Corps to listen to the memorial sermon at his church next Sunday at 2.30 p. m. A large delegation will attend.

The school committee at a recent meeting made all the appointments of teachers for the coming year. They also voted to purchase an encyclopedia for the Green street school. The examinations for admission to the academy will be held the 16th and 18th.

The date of the Interscholastic Athletic meet has been fixed for June 16 at Amherst. The Academy team has won the banner twice, and should they win this year will keep it. The boys intend to run a special train to enable the spectators to see the programme through and get home the same night.

A special town meeting is to be held soon, probably a week from next Monday, to fill the vacancy on the board of selectmen occasioned by the death of A. A. Gage, and it is probable that G. H. Newton will accede to the wishes of many of the citizens and allow his name to be placed on nomination papers.

The alarm of fire which rang out yesterday morning at 10.30 was occasioned by a blaze in the office of Cushman House. The little children of the proprietor, G. L. Cushman, were alone in the office, and getting hold of matches set fire to some papers under the counter. Prompt action on the part of the inmates prevented serious damage.

The towns of Brimfield, Holland and Wales have petitioned the county commissioners to lay a new road begining at the Fentonville school house and extending along the south side of the river, crossing at the electric light works, thence south of the railroad and intersecting the Palmer and Monson road at Tenneyville. Although this road would be on Monson territory it is of no use to Monson people, and none of the expense should fall on Monson.

The King's Daughters will give a strawberry supper and entertainment in the Methodist church this evening. The local artists will be assisted by Miss Josephine Miller of Springfield, soloist, and Miss Katharine Washburn of Boston, violinist. The programme is as follows:

Memorial Day was duly observed by the members of Marcus Keep post, the W. R. C., Sons of Veterans, and citizens generally. The stores and business places were closed, and many of the places of business as well as private residences were appropriately decorated with the stars and stripes. At ten o'clock in the morning a detachment of the post was sent to Moulton Hill cemetery, where short services were held, an address was delivered by Rev. Mr. Marble, and the graves of the fallen comrades decorated. In the afternoon services were held in Memorial Hall; Col. J. A. Titus of Worcester gave the address, and W. F. Miller's double quartette of Ludlow furnished the singing, which was pronounced superb by all who heard it. After the exercises at the hall a march was taken up to the soldiers' monument, which was fittingly decorated. Arriving at the No 1. cemetery forty-eight young misses dressed in white, representing the forty-eight fallen comrades, assisted the veterans in paying this annual tribute to the memory of the dead, and this feature of the exercises was peculiarly a touching, tender tribute of affection from the youth as well as the comrades. After the exercise at the cemetery, the line of march was taken up, and returning to the hall a bountiful collation was in waiting, which had been prepared by the Woman's Relief Corps. In the evening an informal reception was held, at which the members of the post and the ladies of the W. R. C. listened to remarks from Col. Titus, the speaker of the day, and others.

Clarence Guess, six years old, living with Mrs. Markham, fell into the river Saturday afternoon and was nearly drowned. With a son of N. V. Chaffee younger than himself he was playing on the walled embankment, when he lost his balance and fell over. The younger boy thought he would come out, but as he did not gave the alarm. C. C. Chaffee plunged into the water and in his excitement failed to find the boy the first time, but the second time found him in the middle of the stream. Fully ten minutes had elapsed after the boy sank the last time, and only after an hour of artificial respiration was there any evidence of life.

Among them were several honorary members, including the venerable Liberty Allen, aged 84, Warriner Moffatt, a few years younger, and ex-postmaster Cory and Henry Nichols. All were old residents of the town and formerly neighbors of Mrs. Fox, whose birthplace was in Sturbridge, where she lived during her maiden days. The weather was slightly cloudy, but their hearts were light and happy, and all seemed to have what they came for—a good time and a square meal.

Sandford Converse had eight sheep and eight lambs killed by dogs. The selectmen were called upon to view the bodies.

The employes in the Otis Company's mills are being vaccinated, it being required that each person shall present at the mill a card signed by a physician that it has been done.

Rev. A. M. Osgood will have for his subject next Sunday morning, "The Service of Suffering," and in the evening, "Life's Battlefield." The children will sing at the evening service.

The juniors and seniors of the high school had charge of decorating the soldiers' monument this year. A committee from these classes, making a 'bus load, visited Hardwick Pond Monday for evergreen.

At Beaver Lake Wednesday the double scull race was won by S. W. Coe and F. G. Fox, the single by F. M. Sibley, and the canoe race by Dr. E. H. Guild and F. G. Fox. F. J. Browning won the trap shooting medal with Dr. W. O. Barrett second.

There was an interesting game of ball on Wednesday forenoon on the pumping station grounds between the Haydenvilles and Wares. Strong work was done by both sides. The Haydenvilles are a crack team, but were defeated by a score of 12 to 0.

James Potts came near losing his life at Gilbertville last Sunday afternoon. He attempted to cross the river on a stringer, when he fell into the water and being stunned by the fall was in danger of being drowned, but was rescued by his son Robert.

There was a fairly good audience at the town hall Wednesday to hear the Memorial address by Henry C. Davis, which was a most excellent one, giving a history of the times from the election of Lincoln to the close of the war, and paying high tribute to the loyal women of the North as well as the men who went to the front.

The Boston and Maine Railroad has set a gang of men at work excavating under their road at Gibb's crossing, to allow the highway to pass under the tracks. This has long been considered a dangerous crossing, and there has for some years been talk of having the matter attended to. The town will pay part of the expense.

There is a general feeling of dissatisfaction at the action of all the stores closing all day Memorial Day. Many came from out of town expecting that they would be open in the forenoon as usual, but even the markets were closed, so that those who went to purchase their dinner Wednesday were disappointed and obliged to get along with whatever they might have in the house. The drug stores were also closed all day, showing by their acton that they have more respect for Memorial Day than for the Lord's day, as they are open a portion of every Sunday. The closing satisfied a sentiment of the boys in blue, but many of the merchants, who could ill afford it, lost the large out of town trade, and their customers are not likely to forget it next year.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA

Every now and then we hear of some wonderful things being done at Broadhurst Bros.' shoe store, Springfield. Then it was women's tan colored goat Oxfords for 75 cents, regularly sold at $1.50. Now its women's kid Blucherette Oxford ties, patent leather tip and opera toe for $1.25, an exact duplicate of what has been selling for $2.

We liked the extra hum of activity in carpets last week. Such bargains as we offer are simply irresistable: $1.15 Moquettes for 79 cents, 67 cent Lowell and Hartford Ingrains for 55 cents, 50 cent all wool Ingrains for 37½ cents, Tapestries at 45 cents and Brussels at 72½ cents.

Second floor of Pynchon street building.

We shall not tell you how many jackets, capes and wraps we sold last week. Exagerating is bad, but it's worse to tell truth literally or conservatively that appears to be exagerated. That's our case with these garments. But then, at the prices, anybody might sell as many as we did. Must have still more room however, for women's and girl's suits and dresses. Styles upon styles of them arriving every day—we mean to do the dress and suit business of this section.

Two trade livencrs in boys' suits to-day.

175 all wool suits, black and blue, and light and dark mixtures at $3. Same suits sold earlier in the season for $3.75, 4, 4.50, and 5. 14 styles to choose from, including 4 styles of combination suits.

75 suits that sold earlier in the season for $2.50, 2.75, 3 and 3.50, going at $2 a suit.

"Play" for some women—hard work for others.

Perhaps, for most women, more or less of both. Fix it to suit yourself. More play and less work—that's when you wash and clean with Pearline. More work and less play—that's when you wash with soap in the old back-breaking way.

Better work, too, with Pearline. Little or none of the rubbing that wears things out. It's something to think about whether you do your own work, or have it done.

Easier, quicker, better, cheaper—and absolutely safe. Facts about Pearline known by millions of women. 325

Beware of imitations. JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind, etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

A Dollar or two.

With cautious step, as we trend our way through
This intricate world as other folks do,
May we still on our journey be able to view
The benevolent face of a dollar or two;
For an excellent thing is a dollar or two:
No friend is so true as a dollar or two:
Through country and town, as we pass up and down,
No passport's so good as a dollar or two.

Would you read yourself out of the bachelor crew,
And the hand of a female divinity sue?
You must always be ready the handsome to do,
Although it should cost you a dollar or two.
Love's arrows are tipped with a dollar or two,
And affection is gained by a dollar or two.
The best aid you can meet in advancing your suit
Is the eloquent chink of a dollar or two.

Would you wish your existence with faith to imbue,
And enroll in the ranks of the sanctified few?
To enjoy a good name and a well-cushioned pew,
You must freely come down with a dollar or two.
The gospel is preached for a dollar or two,
And salvation is claimed for a dollar or two:
You may sin some at times, but the worst of all crimes,
Is to find yourself short of a dollar or two.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

We're half crazy, hearing these songs of you,
We've waited for months and hollered,
In your bicycle wake we've "followed,

By a messenger boy in blue.

A REVOLUTIONARY HEROINE.

One of the most heroic actions in the history of the Revolutionary times was that of Marion Gibbs, a thirteen-year-old girl, who lived on a plantation near Charleston, in the State of South Carolina. Marion's father had been a brave soldier in the Centinental army, and had been horribly wounded by a cannon-ball, which left him a cripple for life.

Shortly after the invasion of Charleston, the British soldiers under Colonel Tarleton ravaged the surrounding country, stealing the horses of the planters, and setting fire to their barns and homes. One morning while Marion was busily employed with her spinning-wheel, one of the plantation slaves made his appearance in the room where the young housekeeper was at work, and in great excitement begged his mistress to hurry to the swamp, as the English soldiers were nearing the house, adding that they had already fired some of the buildings and shot several of the negroes who attempted to escape.

Hastily summoning the servants, Marion had her father and the children conveyed to a hiding-place in the swamp but a short distance away, and directed the negro nurse to get the baby, a boy two years old, and join them while she should get together a few needed articles. As soon as the red coats of the soldiers were observed approaching through the orchard, Marion slipped out of the rear door, and sped away to the retreat provided for this emergency.

Upon joining the frightened group our little heroine discovered that the nurse and the baby had not been seen by any one in the party. Without uttering a word she darted back along the intricate path that led through the lonely morass, fear and distress adding wings to her feet. Upon emerging from the gloomy forest she beheld the house in flames, and surrounded by the soldiers, while flying towards her and wringing her hands in agony came Aunt Dinah, who sobbed out:

"Honey, honey! is you got de baby? Aunt Dinah jes stop one minute ter go to de wash house fo' de babby's clo'es, and when she go back de house all on fire! Oh! tell me, honey, is you got de babby?"

The next moment a little form flashed between the ranks of dragoons, and disappeared within the structure, from which greedy tongues of flame were spitefully thrust out of doors and windows, accompanied by rolling volumes of black smoke. Before the startled soldiers had finished their cries of consternation, Marion reappeared, bearing in her burnt, brave little arms a white bundle, from which a child's frightened cry was heard as the heroic girl once more rushed away in the direction of the swamp. Instead of impeding her flight, the English soldiers swung their hats and cheered her until the dark forest hid her from view.—Harper's Young People.

SHOPPING IN TURKEY.

Though the Turks cannot be called lazy, yet they like to take their time. Patience, they say, belongs to God; hurry, to the devil. Nowhere is this so well illustrated as in the manner of shopping in Turkey. This was brought particularly to our notice when we visited the Sivas bazaars, to examine some inlaid silverware, for which the place is celebrated. The customer stands in the street inspecting the articles on exhibition; the merchant sits on his heels on the booth floor. If the customer is of some position in life, he climbs up and sits down on a level with the merchant. If he is a foreigner, the merchant is quite deferential. A merchant is not a merchant at all, but a host entertaining a guest. Coffee is served; then a cigarette rolled up and handed to the "guest," while the various social and other local topics are freely discussed. After coffee and smoking the question of purchase is gradually approached; not abruptly, as that would involve a loss of dignity; but circumspectly, as if the buying of anything were a mere afterthought. Maybe, after half and hour, the customer has indicated what he wants, and after discussing the quality of the goods, the customer asks the price in an off-hand way, as though he were not particularly interested. The merchant replies, "0?, whatever your highness pleases," or "I shall be proud of your highness will do me the honor to accept it as a gift." This means nothing whatever, and is merely the introduction to the haggling which is sure to follow. The seller, with silken manners and brazen countenance, will always name a price four times as large as it should be. Then the real business begins. The buyer offers one half or one fourth of what he finally expects to pay; and a war of words, in a blustering tone, leads up to the close of this everyday farce.—"Across Asia on a Bicycle," in The Century for May.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailloutte, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with la grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Your Palate is Your Stomach's Conscience.
Fats, Oils and Grease make thin people thinner.
Thin people are thin because the food they eat doesn't make them fat. Reasons: wrong food; right food ill-digested.
Fats, oils and grease will not make anybody fat. They keep a fat person fat, but they make thin people grow thinner. The reason is because they are indigestible. The thin person finds it hard to digest his food. Fatty food makes it harder still for him.
Doctors forbid dyspeptics food cooked in grease, yet they will prescribe a full dose of Cod liver oil three times a day! The best doctors know that cod liver oil is just as indigestible as any other oil or grease. They prescribe Paskola, a Pre-Digested food, instead.
Have you ever noticed that almost without exception thin, pale, dyspeptic, anaemic people have an aversion to fat? This is proof enough that it is bad for them.
Your palate is your stomach's conscience. Your stomach knows what is good for you.
Starch food is the food we need most of. Starch food makes us fat. Pre-digested starch food will make us fat when ordinary starch food won't. Paskola is a pre-digested starch food. It agrees with the weakest stomach. It helps the weak stomach to digest other food. It is fattening and invigorating.
Nothing but starch food will ever make you fat. The starch food that will make you fattest is Paskola.
Mr. M. Leonard, of Biddeford, Me., says: "I have derived more benefit from two-thirds of a bottle of 'Paskola' than from all the medicine I have used in the past six months."

INTRODUCING
A. A. Shepherd and Dr. Scott.
THE GREAT NEW YORK SPECIALIST —THE DOCTOR PREVAILED UPON TO HAVE HIS GREAT REMEDY PLACED IN THE HANDS OF THE DRUGGISTS.
This is the most wonderful production of medical science in the nineteenth century. This is not a patent medicine, but a prescription compounded on scientific principles and used by Dr. Scott in his extensive practice for the cure of all blood diseases. The cures wrought by it are simply wonderful, and attracted thousands to the doctor's parlors for treatment.
To such an extent is the demand upon the time and attention of the doctor for this medicine from people who could not visit New York city that it became a matter of duty to devise some plan by which the general public could be supplied with this genuine valuable remedy, and for this purpose A. A. Shepherd has been called to arrange with LeGro & Lynde of Palmer, to permit them to keep in stock and sell this wonderful blood remedy. This is purely vegetable, an excellent tonic and builder, a blood purifier unexcelled, a nerve tonic nothing can equal. Dr. Scott has devoted his life to the thorough knowledge and understanding of blood diseases.
A few of which are named here: Kidney disease, liver complaint, sick headache, muscular rheumatism, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, constipation, scrofula, syphilis, cancerous humors, pain in bones, catarrh, salt rheum, pimples on face, general debility, boils, dizziness, female weakness, malarial poison.
The above named druggists have received their first consignment, and would invite all persons to call and become acquainted with the merits of a perfect remedy. Dr. Scott's medicine, when placed in drug stores is sold under the name of Dr. Scott's Sarsaparilla, and all who intend taking a spring medicine should not fail to try Dr. Scott's Sarsaparilla. No pills have to be used with Dr. Scott's.
PRAISED WHENEVER USED.
C. L. Seaver, of Birmingham, Conn., says: "For building up a weak or debilitated constitution, I know of nothing so sure and good as Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It makes flesh and strengthens the body."

At Sea.

I watch the white sails as they spread
Their wings, like birds set free;
And some o'er distant waves will glide,
Some in the wished-for haven bide,
And some—be lost at sea.

And thus, upon Life's changeful main,
While Hope sang merrily,
Full many a barque from off the strand
We launched with eager heart and hand,
Nor dreamt of loss at sea.

But were there treacherous rocks and shoals
All, all unknown to thee?
It matters not—the heart doth know
That cruel storm hath sunken low
The venture out at sea.

Mayhap it was no costly freight,
Tho' rich to you or me;
And Memory, as the days go by,
Still counteth o'er with tearful eye
Her treasures lost at sea.

Ah, well, there is a haven sweet
Where shipwreck cannot be;
Sad hearts, who sit in patient pain,
There shall ye gather back again
Much that was lost at sea.

WINSOME'S ELOPEMENT.

(Concluded).

CHAPTER III.

Winter was at hand. Aunt Taffy had cut out wooden coats for all hands. Even the persimmons were "done up." The grand procession that brought the pot dinner dishes across the open space between the kitchen and the house did it on the full run, lest the food should chill, and little darkies were already talking about "Christmas gifts," when Archibald Tudor, one evening, addressed sisters and daughters thus:—

"My dears, I have something very pleasant to tell you." He arose, dropped the portiere, placed his chair before the glowing, open fire, and signaled to them to draw closer. "To-day," he said, "I have received a great compliment. Judge Lionel Spencer, the gentleman of all others I most respect, has asked my permission to pay his addresses to Winsome. Of course I need not say what I answered."

"Of course not, papa," cried Winsome. "Why, the judge is older than you are. What a preposterous idea!"

"Daughter Winsome," grasped Mr. Tudor, "you are evidently not aware what an honor has been offered you!"

"Oh, yes, as to that, I quite understand," said Winsome. "I think him too old; but that is a matter of taste. But what settles the matter completely is this: I am engaged to some one else. Jack Sylvestre and I have understood each other for a long while; and I should have told you before."

"Heavens and earth!" ejaculated Mr. Tudor. "What do I hear? Jack Sylvestre, Judge Spencer's protegé, his rival and your choice!"

"Oh, not his rival, papa!" said the Vassar girl. "For the idea that the judge could be so stupid never entered either of our minds. But the fact is as I've stated it: We are engaged."

"You are very independent, indeed, I see," said Mr. Tudor. "But I have a voice in the matter. Young Jack Sylvestre is no match for you. You must put him out of your mind. Calm consideration will show you that the judge is a splendid match, in all respects. Meanwhile, I shall write to this Jack that he must never enter my doors again. Such a breach of hospitality as courting my daughter without my knowledge cannot be forgiven."

"If Jack is not allowed to come here, I shall meet him where I can, papa," said Miss Winsome. "I respect and love you, but you have no right to give me away to an old man. Besides, I have pledged my word, and we love each other truly, Jack and I. You see, nothing can be done; my mind is made up. I hope you will tell the worthy judge as much."

Mr. Archibald Tudor stared at his sister, the widow, who returned his horror-stricken gaze with interest.

"This comes of Vassar," she said, under her breath. He turned to look at Miss Benjamina, but she had vanished.

With a sickening sense of desolation upon her, she had sped to her own room, shut the door and hidden her face in the pillows.

Winsome! Little Winsome had grown up to steal her idol from her! What a tragedy was life.

A soft-shod foot came into the room, a great tender hand patted her back as nurses pat those of little babies.

"Dar, honey," whispered old Taffy's voice, "don' mind me, I knows—I always has knowed; he ain't wuff cryin' for, honey, ef he kin like dat long yaller-haired gal better'n you, jes like a jewel, so harnsome, an' dark an' bright. I cyant believe it nohow, Miss Ben."

And now, broken-hearted Miss Benjamina turned to her old nurse, and sobbed upon her breast, while down below they talked and talked, until Winsome, rising, said:—

"All this is very foolish, and can end in nothing. I am sorry to offend you, papa, but you are really unreasonable. Good night."

She walked steadily away, and her father sat down to write a note to Jack Sylvestre. From that moment there was no longer any peace in the fine old mansion. Despite her father's commands, Winsome did meet Jack. Her father's letter had horrified him, and when they talked it over he was astonished beyond measure.

"I thought Judge Spencer knew and approved of my love for you, darling," he said. "It never occurred to me that he could be my rival. It is a bad state of things, for my future prosperity depends upon him to a great degree, and now he will be my enemy."

"Oh, you have talent and energy, Jack. You'll get on without him," his Vassar girl cried, "and, remember, I'll be true to you."

True she was, and Jack's spirit was cheered by her valor.

Meanwhile, important affairs had taken the judge to New Orleans, and Mr. Tudor did not find it necessary to impart the evil tidings to him.

He frowned upon his daughter, Mrs. Canning wore an air of disapproval, and Miss Benjamina was as cold as an iceberg to her niece. It was all very miserable; and, at last, the judge's return home being expected every day, and the misery of being obliged to tell him that his daughter had refused him being more than Mr. Tudor felt that he could bear, fury possessed him; and finding the young people walking near the church one Sunday evening, he pounced upon Winsome, bore her home and conducted her to her own room, which was in the second floor of the left wing of the house.

"Here you stay, Winsome," he said, "until you promise me never to see Jack Sylvestre again."

"Then you drive me to extremities, papa," Winsome replied.

He answered by locking her in.

The girl simply sat down by the window. In half an hour a shadow stood in the moonlight below. She let down a spool of cotton, to which he attached a piece of paper. She drew it up, read the paper, and wrote something on a card.

Several of these missives travelled up and down the wall; then the shadow departed.

Immediately Winsome set to work to tie together all the sheets and towels that she could find. She had learned to tie a good of Rev. F. E. Jenkins to the Grand Army Post of Palmer, May 30, 1894.

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS

Commander; Members of the L. L. Merrick Post; Ladies of the Woman's Relief Corps; Ladies and Gentlemen:—

You, veterans of the great civil war, and we, citizens of a beloved land saved from overthrow by heroic deeds and martyrs' blood, have marched to the graves of our honored dead and placed upon them the symbols of our loving remembrance, undying gratitude and reverential honor. I say we have placed these flowers upon their graves, though every flower was actually borne and placed by a soldier's hand. Our hearts went with you to each grave and with you bent reverently over it. Had you not been here, we would have done it by our own hands. Should we linger among earthly scenes after you leave them, we shall not fail to put upon their graves and yours the yearly token. We shall teach our children of the debt they owe the soldiers and they, their children and their children's children will see that the soldiers' graves shall not be forgotten, nor want their annual tribute.

We come now to this memorial building, erected by the town of Palmer in honor of the soldiers, and to this hall dedicated to the use of the soldiers as long as there shall be two alive to meet in it—you come, we all come here to rehearse the deeds of the heroes whose graves we have decorated, to learn the meaning of their sacrifice and to consecrate ourselves to the maintenance and completion of that for which the sacrifice was made. I regard it as an honor that you have thought it possible that I might bring a message that would in any measure be fitting. Would that my heart could speak without the clumsy medium of brain and tongue! I am sure that I could then bring the tribute you wish spoken to-day.

My vocation is one dedicated to peace. The Master whom I seek to serve is the Prince of Peace. The message which I have been ordained to proclaim is the declaration of peace. Through the eye of the inspired prophet I look into the future to the time when the nations shall beat their swords into plowshares, their spears into prunning-hooks and learn war no more; and I am bidden to tell to men the sweet story of their coming history; to point to the World's Golden Age, not as in the wars of the past, but in the peace and development of the future.

Is this vocation incompatible with the duty I am now attempting? Can I step from the pulpit of a Christian church to the platform of a Grand Army Post and speak words of praise of those whose heroic deeds were on bloody battle fields and who did their work for humanity with sword, musket and cannon? Can I speak the words to which this platform is dedicated and return to yonder pulpit and proclaim the Gospel of Peace? I trow I can and never feel the wrench of speaking things incompatible. He, whose name was called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace, plainly declared that he came not to bring peace on earth at once but first a sword. The universal law of love must antedate a universal peace whose abiding can be certain. The quiet that follows when all nations lift a flag of truce is not peace. It is but resting on their arms that they may draw breath and strength for harder fighting. The peace of Europe to-day is not the peace of love, is not real peace at all. France would march into Germany within a week if she were sure she could whip her old enemy and regain her lost territory. Russia would fight anybody and everybody for the coveted outlet to the Mediterranean or the Indian Ocean if she dared. As the conditions for universal peace move on they encounter and they must encounter the resistance of all the forces of evil. The onward march of peace is—strange to say—over battle fields where flow streams of blood. The forces which make for peace never originate a war, but they meet a thousand wars on the way.

Nothing at first sight seems to be more heterogeneous and disconnected than the facts of human history. But a more careful study discloses in them all a wonderful unity. If we would understand the work of our brave citizen-soldiers, if we would truly honor them and fittingly pass on their memory to the generations to come, we must grasp this truth—the unity of history. There is visibly unfolding in the earth a vast plan for the reclaiming of mankind. Out of the clashing masses of warring humanity is to be fashioned a united brotherhood. This is the unfolding plan. The masses surge to and fro; evil chases good from many a battlefield, and fiends laugh and men weep—but slowly through the centuries the battles of Brotherhood are won. Shall we come boldly to the great truth and state it in its simplest form? It is this: Back of human history is God! He is not using men as puppets and pulling the string to see them dance. But he is winning them as men, as free intelligences. He may see a truth or moral force defeated for a thousand generations, but if it be a part of the plan of a restored and exalted humanity, it eventually wins its battle and takes possession of its field. A thousand years in his sight are but as yesterday when it is past and as a watch in the night.

In God's plan for a new humanity this nation surely has a place. During all the centuries when Egyptian, Assyrian, Phoenician, Hebrew, Greek and Roman were playing their parts in the world's history, when man was learning what he could not do for himself, this vast Western Continent was guarded by the great and terrible oceans over whose unknown expanse man dared not send his strongest ships. But when the time came for new ideals, when "the human mind was getting ready to accept a new and larger interpretation of the life of man, this fresh theater of human action was discovered. To its great forests and virgin soil came men who had learned something of the worth of man, men who dared to believe that each was made in the image of God and that no man had a right to bind their consciences with any fetters which man had forged. Hither they came and here they wrought. And as they wrought in the pure atmosphere of a new world—in an atmosphere which wafted exhalations from no body of corrupting traditions—in a land where history had to be made from the beginning, they were gradually freed from the malaria of old institutions. In church and state they thought and acted for themselves. The old and the new had to meet the same test in their minds and practice. Is it true? Is it right? With an intense sense of the authority of righteousness, a profound sense of the dignity of man, a masterful sincerity, a majestic ideal, a superb and shining courage and an unconquerable faith in God, they founded, built and defended a nation such as the world had never seen before. It was a new ideal and with it began a new life for humanity. The tide of human progress which had gathered and receded for centuries leaped with a bound over a new continent and gathering volume in the new swept back over a large part of the old. In all the changes of the coming centuries whether our country shall live or die, the historians of the future will reckon an era of humanity from the founding of the United States of America.

But when this nation was founded even its great founders had not the strength of their clearest vision. They dared not say whether they were building a nation or a federation of nations; they dared not interpret their own declaration that all men were created free and equal to apply to all men. They left in the body of the State the thorn of slavery and the result was a festering, exasperating sore. The plan of history culminates in a universal brotherhood in which man is the unit, his color and his race accidents. If this country were to have a permanent place in the plan, it must conform to the purpose of the plan. It must be a brotherhood. It must be a nation and a nation of brother-men.

The history of the great struggle is familiar to us all—even to the school boy. The states of the North gradually and early discarded both the practice of slavery and belief in its righteousness. The states of the South finding it profitable financially, gradually overcame their conscientious scruples against it and built up their whole social system about it. The Church itself first opposed, then acquiesced and finally adopted it as a divine institution. Then came in conflict the conscience of the North and the social system of the South. The South cared nothing for the practice of the North, but everything for the predominance of the slave power in the country. So long as the majority in Congress was sure to vote for slavery on Southern soil, so long the Union was safe. But new states were growing out of the great western territory and each state took its place by its senators and representatives in Congress. Each section eagerly sought for the increase of its power. As the country developed the South began to see that it was slowly but surely losing ground in comparison with the gain of the North. It would be only a matter of time when the conscience of the country would win and the distinctly Southern institution would pass away and with it their whole social order. At last when Abraham Lincoln was elected President of the United States, they knew the side of conscience had won. The forces which had placed him at the head of the nation would in time sweep slavery out of existence. The southern people were right in their judgment, though wrong in their institution. Those forces were born of God and the human conscience and they had the uncomperable life of God in them. Right on they swept and slavery was in their course and slavery must go before their mighty power. The stream might be stopped for a time, but only to gather volume and strength sufficient to sweep away the obstacle and hurl it forever from its last resting place in the civilized world.

The South must now make ready for its final parting with slavery, or it must fall back on the doctrine that this is not a nation, but a federation of nations, and withdraw from the federation. It matters not that Lincoln had no intention of abolishing slavery, that his supporters had no such intention. The same principles which led them to see that slavery was wrong and to oppose its extension, when they should ever utter their full message would demand its overthrow. It might not be Lincoln's day, it might not be the new party's day, but the light of God's day was dawning over the hills of human affairs and slavery's day was in its gloaming.

From that election day, Nov. 6th, 1860, to the surrender of Lee April 9th, 1865, events that would have made any decade in our national history famous were of almost daily occurence. On Dec. 20, the Ordinance of Secession was signed in the hall of the South Carolina Institute in Charlestown in front of the great banner representing a new confederacy of the fifteen slave-holding states built from the ruins of the Union. In quick succession Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and Texas declared themselves out of the Union, and Feb 4 their delegates gathered in the State House in Montgomery, Alabama, and organized the Confederate States of America, and Feb. 18 Jefferson Davis was inaugurated its first and only president. On the 4th of March Lincoln took the oath of office and began that career of four years, one month and eleven days which was not only great in times of great events, but is a precious legacy to this country and the human race for all time.

At half past four on the morning of April 12th, the signal shell burst in the air above Fort Sumter and Edmund Ruffin sent the first rebel shot plowing into the masonry of the now famous fort. The Civil War had begun. Conscience had arraigned a nation's sin, and selfishness was in arms and began the fight whose issue was to be a new and better humanity.

I say selfishness was in arms and began the war, but do not misunderstand me. I am not setting up the Southern people as fiends. I have lived among them, eaten with them and prayed by their side and know that they are not fiends and they were not them. But selfishness carried the black man in chains from his native Africa, selfishness bought him and carried him to the plantation. Selfishness had trained him for service in kitchen, dressing-room and parlor; in forest, field and stable—for such exact service as money cannot hire. The first stages had long since passed. The Southern whites had been born into conditions of slavery. They came into it as they came into the other circumstances of their existence and without question they, as a whole, looked upon it as one of God's kind arrangements for their good. Its selfishness, where it was selfishness, was refined—refined so that the voice of religion proclaiming the brotherhood of man did not seem to be saying anything against them.

But when the institution was attacked, it was selfishness in the last analysis that arose in its defense. A popular vote of the Southern states would not have been for rebellion. But men of the Davis stamps planned, manipulated, cajoled and threatened until the whole Southern people rose in mass and believed they were fighting for their homes and their little ones and that they were moved by the loftiest patriotism. To this day the Southern heart, in spite of the acceptance of the results of the war, in spite of the people's gladness that slavery is gone forever, in spite of their pride in this great republic—theirs as well as ours—the Southern heart I say, in spite of all these things clings tenderly to that terrible past—when they lost their all and seems almost to believe that it was they who fought for their country.

Oh! those days and months and years. How they are burned into the remembrances of my boyhood! How their scenes are the sums of the lives of your veterans for years of your strongest manhood! There comes vividly to my mind the form and face of a grandfather after he had said farewell to five sons as they started South, each mourning because he was too old to go and the only son left too young. There was in all those years but one real theme of conversation; but one kind of news for the newspapers; almost but one theme for the pulpit. The very love letters read like war documents. What ebb and flow of joy and sorrow. When yesterday the nation was shouting in ecstacy over some great victory, and the very mother's tears as they fell on the paper where she read the name of her boy among those who were killed in the battle glistened with pride that her boy fell as a hero for his country's sake. To-day every countenance is sad. Every step is taken as if each one were bearing a burden too heavy to carry—and he is, a heart-burden—the very laughter of the children is hushed; the boys in blue have been routed and the rebels are shouting. Yesterday a brother or father who had been unable before to leave, broke away from all bonds and left for the war. To-day a son comes weak and worn from a Southern prison to be nourished back to health again, that he may be ready for the battles yet to come. Are these dreams of some fearful night of the past when our food had not digested? As we read our papers to-day and sit at our fireside, it seems sometimes as if this must be; but no, they are the realities of the past. They are a part of unchangeable history. We have stopped the wheels of business and the pursuits of every day life for a mid-week Sabbath, that we might learn anew the meaning of this past, honor the memory of those who made it noble with their sacrifices and gird our spirits to make the present and the future worthy of their past.

In those days, as a boy, I thought I knew something of the meaning of war—something of its cost. I heard of the millions that the war was costing, of the thousands who died in camp, field, hospital and prison. I used to wonder how it would seem to live in a land without a war and whether I ever should again. In after time in school and college I studied the history of the war. The cost in millions, the number of the slain, the names of the battles, all these and more could fall lightly from the tongue and I thought I knew something of the cost of the war.

But when I for the first time stepped through the gate of the National cemetery in Chattanooga and wandered about in that beautiful landscape garden of the dead, I experienced something like a mental and heart shock. As I gazed in astonishment over those acres of white headstones and read their numbers, 3000, 4000, 5000, 6000, 8000, 10,000, 12,000 almost 13,000—I had new light on the cost of the war. Numbers had meant nothing to me before but historical statements hard to fix in the memory—now every one meant a man—and every man a circle of friends. Just over there towered Lookout Mountain and just over there stretched away Missionary Ridge and just over there was Chickamauga. I had heard of them, read of them and studied of them as battlefields where glorious things were done. Now I looked about me and saw what those battles cost. Every stone gleaming white under that Southern sun, whether it had on it his name and rank and company and regiment and state, or whether it was one of the hundreds of those low, nameless ones with nothing but a number upon it—every stone, I say, brought to my mind the picture of a hero struggling up yonder height through showers of deadly bullets, or over yonder ridge, or moving with military precision across yonder plain; but every one straight into the jaws of death. On that day, I say, I caught the first real glimpse of the actual cost of the war. In my often wanderings through the South, I made it a point to visit where-ever I could our National cemeteries, and everywhere they told me the story anew. Every one is a school of patriotism, teaching silently, but with awful emphasis, and yet the awfulness is tempered with much of sweetness, tenderness and appreciation. It is worth something to know that we are a part of a humanity that can cherish noble sentiments, that we are a part of a great country that can tenderly care for the dust of its dead. Those pretty lawns and walks, those beautiful flowers and trees in our National cemeteries furnish not merely an annual Decoration Day, but decorate the soldiers' graves through all the year and will through all the years to come of our country's history. To-day our National cemeteries have been made fragrant with fresh-cut flowers, but better yet they are redolent the year round with a Nation's gratitude. Ft. Smith with its 2000 graves, Baltimore with its 2300, Gettysburg with its 3600, Antietam and Little Rock with their 5000 each, Mound City with its 6000, Marietta, Ga., with its 10,000, Chattanooga with 13,000, Nashville with 17,000, Arlington Heights with its 22,000 and others with their thousands and hundreds—in all these you can learn the cost of war and something of the greatness of our country that cannot be measured by statistics.

But if you would learn of a cost of the war that transcends what these I have mentioned tell, come with me in thought to southern Georgia. We will leave our train at a small village and walk across the fields a half mile or so. We are on the site of the famous,—or infamous—Andersonville prison. We stand by a little rill and look upon a field of growing cotton sloping upward on either side like an amphitheater. Once this was surrounded—a field of many acres—by a strong stockade and near by lives the man under whose direction it was built. Around this stockade in those times was an armed guard and within was the dead line. That little rill now so pure and sparkling was then a mass of filth, wilfully so made by those who seem to have lost the semblance of a heart. Yonder on the left are many holes painfully dug by the prisoners without implements, their poor ragged garments pressed into service to convey the dirt to the surface. There they sought in vain for water uncontaminated by the wickedness of man.

But right down here by our feet—not far within where the old stockade stood, hard by where the dead-line passed, there flows out a spring of clear, cool water. It is called Providence spring. I do not know its real history. But I know that the colored people there to-day and many a soldier who was prisoner there in the years of war believe that it was given in answer to the prayers of the thirsty, suffering prisoners. Those unstoned and waterless wells certainly tell us the story of a long search for water, and there flows the water now from such a spot as to prevent its contamination before reaching the prisoners who were gathered there by the thousands.

Come now over across the fields to the left of the prison location and we find another National cemetery. It is not so large as the others we have visited—only a few acres. The trees are there, but the soil refuses the green sod we feel ought to cover the soldier's grave, though there is evidence that it has been nourished with every care. On this dead level of sand the landscape gardener was helpless. Forms of beauty could not come here at the bidding of any genius. But look at the headstones! Elsewhere we have seen them gathered in military groups. They suggest the regiments with their divisions facing their officers. But here they stretch away in row after row, one behind another, eight or ten feet apart. And the stones are close together. You see at once that the dead are buried in a common grave. There are the trenches filled with the bodies of those who died in that prison over there—died of hunger and diseases which were the results of wickedness and inhumanity on the part of their captors. The characters of Lee and Jackson and others like them, the motives of many who fought in the Gray may throw a light upon the darkness of the black man in chains from his native Africa, selfishness can never be untoid and no light can be thrown upon it that will not reveal even greater wickedness.

But look at those numbers! Up, through the thousands they go—up, up, up, past thirteen thousand lying in that great grave; and they died over in that prison—an awful, useless sacrifice!

Oh! the cost of the war; who shall compute it? Well do we scatter the flowers to-day in all the thousands of graveyards of the North where the veterans lie sleeping; well do the people of this nation place a handful of flowers on each of these thousands of graves in the great gathering places of the nation's heroes, well is it that a million graves in this land have tributes of flowers on them at this moment. We cannot repay the cost to those who paid it with their lives, but we can show that we remember them and cherish their deeds in our hearts.

Through all the months and years of the war there were many noble victories; but the noblest of them all came after the war had closed. When nine hundred thousand soldiers disbanded and returned to home-life and peaceful arts; that was a victory such as the world had never seen before—not of military genius, but of the new humanity nurtured in our free institutions and disciplined to self-government.

The battles have all been fought. In all our horizon no thunder cloud shows itself to tell of threatening war. Great questions are before us for answer; great problems for solution; great enterprises to be accomplished; but in them all there does not seem to be anything that can grow into war.

PALMER NEWS.

Excluded from the Church.

Rev. S. T. Frost, late pastor of the Baptist church in this place, was excluded from membership in that church Monday evening by a vote of 27 to 6, on several charges reflecting upon his Christian character and conduct.

Mr. Frost's brief pastorate in this place has proved a trying and unfortunate one for the church over which he presided. He was a preacher of considerable ability, with a good presence and voice, and when he came here as a candidate in December, 1892, the church people were much pleased with his sermons and promptly gave him a call, which he accepted, beginning his pastorate the first Sunday in January, 1893. The church at that time had the largest membership in its history, and was united and harmonious. Matters moved smoothly for a time, but it was not long before Mr. Frost's seeming arbitrary manner and injudicious sayings began to cause considerable comment in the community as well as in the church, and before six months had passed there was considerable discussion as to the advisability of terminating the pastorate. The conviction that the church had made a serious mistake grew and intensified, though a portion of the members approved of the pastor's course and stood by him stanchly.

At the annual meeting of the church, January 1st, an informal vote on the desirability of continuing the pastorate resulted in 29 in favor and 20 against it. At an adjourned meeting a week later the friction became so great that it was decided to call a special business meeting at once to see what action the church would take toward terminating the pastorate, and at that meeting it was voted, 31 to 18, to terminate the pastorate at the expiration of three months. Mr. Frost had threatened that if he left there would be another Baptist church in town, and it has been freely alleged that he used his best efforts during the closing three months of his pastorate to divide his own flock and help on the new church which was organized directly afterward, mainly by his friends who went out from the church. There was quite a feeling in the church during this period in favor of disciplining him, but it was thought wiser and better for all concerned to let him finish his pastorate and go away quietly.

On the last Sunday of his pastorate Mr. Frost asked for letters for himself and family to the Tremont Temple Baptist church of Boston, which were granted. Later in the day charges of direct falsehood were brought against Mr. Frost, in connection with his request, during the previous week, for a letter of dismission for a member of the church, and his letter was withheld until the next meeting of the church, when, after a presentation of the facts, the vote granting his letter was reconsidered, and he was suspended, pending a further examination. This was the "last straw," and it was felt that he should now be called upon to explain several matters. Accordingly several charges were presented at the meeting Monday evening, but Mr. Frost refused to answer to any except those in connection with the letter referred to, as he had not been informed that other charges were to be made. He was asked to name an evening when he would meet the church to answer the other charges, but declined to do so, and refused to answer some pointed questions. He made a statement explanatory of the one charge he would consider, wanted to know if the church was satisfied with his explanation, requested them to unite with him in calling a mutual council, warning the church that they could not take any action that would harm him at all, and then withdrew, declining to remain longer. The church then proceeded with its consideration of the charges, and after hearing the evidence voted as above stated, and declined to unite in calling a mutual council.

The necessity for this action is greatly regretted by those who felt obliged to take it, but they saw no other right way out of the difficulty, they say. This does not depose Mr. Frost from the ministry, and it is expected that he will call an ex parte council in the hopes of receiving from his brother clergymen a vindication which will enable him to join another church without difficulty. His late experiences have of course been a great strain upon Mr. Frost himself, as well as others in the church, and he has been quite ill with a heart trouble since Monday.

There are many places about town where the limbs of shade trees which are near the streets hang over the sidewalk so low as to make it very disagreeable for pedestrians, especially in wet weather, when the leaves are dripping with moisture and hang lower than ever, in some places not more than five feet from the walks. They should be trimmed up.

The strawberry festival and entertainment by the Eaton Club held in St. Paul's church Tuesday evening was a numerical and financial success. About 200 were entertained, and the proceeds were nearly $76. This is the last social of the season in this church. A runaway team which started from in front of C. D. Holbrook's grain store Monday afternoon caused no little excitement for a short time. Improvements are being made in the office of the Nassowanno House which will be appreciated by patrons of that hostelry. D., now dean of Tufts Divinity School, being pastor.

The fire alarm apparatus has been changed from the belfry of the Universalist church to the tower of the engine house, and the striker connected with the bell purchased expressly for that purpose. The new bell is heavier than the one on which the alarm has struck, and is of vastly different tone, so that no one need become confused as to whether the fire alarm is ringing or the town clock striking. The apparatus and the alterations at the engine house on Park street will be ready for inspection to-morrow, and all interested in the working of the apparatus or in knowing how the money which was voted for the work was spent are invited to be present. The alarm will be tested at that time.

The winner must present the cup for competition at each tournament of the Palmer bicycle club until one club has won it three times. The 10-mile race is expected to be a good one, as the prizes, a $50 diamond stud, $20 silver water pitcher and $10 race timer, are expected to attract some fast riders. Altogether the prizes are valued at $250.

The resources of the tramp are many, and the atmosphere is extremely frigid when he cannot manage to satisfy his wants. One of the fraternity "struck" a Palmer man whom he knew the other day for half a dollar, but was refused, being frankly told that if he had the money it would go for drinks. He swore good behavior and abstinence from intoxicants, but the money was not forthcoming. The hobo departed, but knowing where the man lived went to the house and informed his wife that Mr. —— had sent him there for a suit of old clothes which had been discarded. The woman gave him a suit which the owner had by no means anticipated relinquishing, and after making a change in the barn and leaving his old rags scattered around the floor the newly-clad tramp left for parts unknown, and hasn't been heard from since. The remarks of the owner of the suit, when he returned from his run on the railroad at night and learned how the man whom he had often befriended had imposed upon him, had better be imagined than put in cold type.

These civil entries were made in the district court last Saturday: Asoph P. Childs against William Foley; M. L. Alberty against George Sherman; Charles L. Holden against Mary Hanifin. In the criminal court Patrick J. Sullivan and John Lynch of Bondsville paid $5 each for fighting the day before. John B. Carmody of Bondsville paid $7 for an assault on Mr. Fuller, principal of the grammar school. Carmody's son was sent from a lower room up to Mr. Fuller a few weeks ago for some misdemeanor, and was punished. Mr. Carmody thought the boy was unduly chastized, and on meeting the teacher one day in Holden's store proceeded to take it out of him, the result being as above, the teacher having sustained no damage. A warrant for the arrest of the teacher on a charge of abusing the boy was asked of the court, but refused. Frank Medory came before the court Tuesday for drunkenness and was sent to the house of correction for two months. On the same day, Luther Gardner of Holland appeared on a variety of charges, including drunkenness and assault, and on each count was sentenced to two months in the house of correction. He appealed and furnished $100 bail in each case. Charles L. Gardner, a son of the defendant, and Minnie S. Gardner, a granddaughter, were committed to the charge of the state board of charity and lunacy, as neglected children. In the case of Charles L., the father appealed, and gave $100 bonds. This morning Charles Hutchins of Three Rivers was fined $10 for drunkenness, and sent up in default of funds.

The JOURNAL has just learned that an unintentional injustice was done Mrs. Henry J. Dill in its issue of April 13th. In an article in that issue concerning the domestic troubles of Mr. and Mrs. Dill. Mr. Dill states that on looking up his wife's record he found that previous to their marriage she had been twice arrested in Springfield. This the JOURNAL is convinced is an error, as Mrs. Dill is well known and thoroughly vouched for by reputable citizens of Springfield, who have been acquainted with her during the 15 years she resided in that city, and who know that she has not appeared before the courts, her character being above reproach in every way.

McKeliget—O'Conner.

Edward J. McKeliget of this place and Miss B. A. O'Conner of Chicopee were united in marriage at the latter place on Tuesday afternoon by Rev. Louis Barry. The bride wore a dress of golden brown satin, and Miss McNancy, bridesmaid, a dress of the same material. Michael McKeliget, brother of the groom, was best man. A Grain Storehouse Burned.

In the midst of a pouring rain last Saturday night the grain elevator and storehouse belonging to Fillmore & Lamey was discovered to be on fire. Shortly after 12 o'clock Mrs. Fillmore was awakened suddenly by some sound, and a little later heard what sounded like a muffled explosion coming from the direction of the storehouse. Passing to another part of the house she found the elevator all on fire. The alarm drew a large crowd, but neither the building nor its contents could be saved. The loss will be about $3000. The building was insured for $1500, and there was $400 insurance on stock. Fillmore & Lamey will rebuild immediately, and will improve upon the old structure. They are making arrangements for the Palmer and Monson Electric Co. to supply them power, and will then do grinding.

Bold Daylight Burglary Attempted.

Officer Manning, contrary to the usual custom that "when you want an officer one cannot be found," happened to be in the right place at the right time Wednesday afternoon. Being a special officer he is only on duty from 6 to 12 o'clock evenings, but Wednesday afternoon he arrested a man who frightened one family badly and caused others considerable inconvenience, and who from all appearances deserved a sentence to some institution where he will be out of harm's way for some time to come. About four o'clock several in the vicinity of F. A. Ruggles's noticed a man come up the street, tip-toe upon the piazzas and try doors. If anyone appeared he would make some excuse and leave. He tried this game at eight different places, until he came to Mrs. Heron's. Here he became bolder and worked another dodge. One of Mrs. Heron's daughters had seen him coming and locked the door, but after trying it and finding it locked the fellow went around to the basement and climbed in, unlocked and opened the basement door so as to have an easy exit, then began a systematic rummage of the cellar. A neighbor informed Mrs. Heron that he was in the house and she immediately ran into the street and called for assistance. The intruder, hearing the outcry, came out and after using considerable abusive language to those who had collected, started up the street. Officer Manning soon appeared, followed the fellow up and after considerable force had been used placed him under arrest. Mrs. Heron, who is by no means strong, was nearly prostrated by the excitement, and is still under the doctor's care.

Turned Upside Down

Is your home in this sad plight—many are and house-cleaning does it. Cold meals and no comfort, sour tempers and aching backs, hard work and too much of it, tired women and "mad" men—all from house-cleaning. And it's all needless. Don't make such a fuss over it. Take a little Pearline, and have it done easily, quickly and quietly. You'll have it done better, too —you won't have to rub the paint off to get the dirt off. You can save half your labor and half your time, if you'll clean house with Pearline—and everybody in the house will be thankful for it. Millions use nothing but Pearline for washing and cleaning.

Turn the Key On the peddlers and grocers who tell you "this is as good as," or "the same as" Pearline. IT'S FALSE; besides Pearline is never peddled. 307 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

sailor's knot which would not slip, and made a good long rope. She fastened one end of of this securely to her heavy rosewood bedstead, and again to a hook which held a great vine against the wall; then she let it down. The end reached the ground, and left a yard to spare. She drew it up again, sat down at a table and wrote a little note:—

"DEAREST FATHER," she said, "I love you more than tongue can say. But, though I am a girl, I am an intelligent human being, and I am going to marry Jack and go away with him.

"It is worse, more disrespectful, to stay and quarrel, than to go away. You will forgive me soon, I know, but when people love as Jack and I do, they must refuse to be separated.

"Jack's cousin is a clergyman. He will marry us to-night, and send you the certificate, and I will write very soon.

Your loving daughter, WINSOME."

She set this on the mantlepiece and put some small possessions in a little bag, a smaller purse in her pocket, and sat down at the window.

Soon that shadow again crossed the moonlight; and with a dexterity that only good gymnastic training could have given her, Winsome, by the aid of her improvised rope and the great branches of the vine, descended to the ground.

In a moment Jack's arms were about her, and his lips met hers.

Two horses, one bearing a side-saddle, were tied to a tree some distance up the road. He assisted her to mount, mounted himself, and they galloped away.

CHAPTER IV.

In half an hour from that moment the wedding-ring was on the girl's finger. She had been married in the parlor of Jack's minister-cousin, in the presence of two witnesses. No one could untie the bond which made her his for life.

"What a terrible step to take!" she said. "Will papa ever forgive me? Oh, Jack! Jack! I have done more for you than I ever thought I would do for any man!"

"I will never forget it, my blessed little wife!" Jack replied.

Then Winsome remembered.

"And you have sacrificed much for me," she said. "You have offended your most important friend, made Judge Spencer your enemy for life, probably. Poor Jack!"

But he told her that she was worth all else in the world to him, and that knowing that she was his, he could do anything.

The first news that Mr. Tudor had of his daughter's flight was the arrival of her certificate of marriage. This rendered the matter less alarming, but his wrath was very great. The ladies trembled with terror; the house-servants hid themselves.

Old Taffy kept repeating:—

"Marse Archy, don't anger de Lord by usin' sech langwich. You take my word, it's de Lord's will, somehow."

"The Lord's will that a girl should disobey her father?" said Mr. Tudor. "Listen to the woman! That's an example of the pious darkey! Sister Thomasina! Sister Benjamina! What am I to say to Judge Spencer? My daughter has insulted him! A gentleman is responsible for insults offered by ladies of his family. I will follow Jack Sylvestre, shoot him, and then commit suicide!"

"I cannot see that you ought to blame yourself, Brother Archy," said the widow, Taffy had gone to the window, and was looking out.

"Jedge Spencer am 'lightin' down at de gate," she said, in her slow, soft way. "Jes gibbin' his bridle to one of de younguns."

"I cannot face him!" Mr. Tudor cried, and rushed away, his long fingers tangled in his curling hair, his eyes glaring, his whole aspect that of one on the verge of insanity.

At this instant the judge appeared at the door, and paused upon the threshold, staring after the retreating figure.

The clasped hands and screaming eyes of the ladies, Taffy's solemn countenance, and Mr. Archibald Tudor's tragic exit, assured him that something unusual had occurred. It was no time for formality.

"Ladies, you are in trouble. Can I be of any assistance?" he inquired, stepping hastily forward.

Mrs. Canning shook her head, being quite unable to speak.

Miss Benjamina hid her face in her handkerchief; but Taffy, feeling that some one ought to make reply, advanced slowly, shaking her turbaned head from side to side.

"Might as well know it fust as last, Jedge Spencer, sah," she said. "Our Miss Winshe done gone 'lope sheself wid Mas' Jack Sylvestre, 'cause Mas' Archy done gone lock her up! Mas' Archy done gone follerr 'em to shoot Mas' Jack and den hiself; and my Miss Tom and my Miss Ben done broke day hearts ober it!"

"Eloped with Jack Sylvestre!" cried the judge. "My dear friend, Archibald Tudor, gave me to understand that he approved of the match. I spoke a good word for the young fellow before I went away; and Mr. Tudor replied that nothing could delight him more than such a union. Ladies, pray explain what caused him to change his mind."

But Taffy gave the ladies no time to speak.

"For de Lord," she said, "dat's de way de reel got tangled up? Jedge Spencer, sah, my Mas' Archy mus' hab done gone got confusticated. He do sometimes. He reckon Jedge Spencer want to marry Miss Winie herself; and when he tell her so, she say to him: 'Paw, please, sah, I is engaged to Mas' Jack Sylvestre, an' I cannot noway go 'way from my word. Please tell Jedge Spencer scuse me, sah.' Dat de way de trouble began."

"And poor little Miss Winnie ran away from the old ogre, who wanted to devour her?" said the judge a little sadly. "Now I remember that I had only said: 'My dear friend, you must have seen how a certain gentleman admires your daughter; how devotedly he loves her, in fact. Have you any objection to his paying her his addresses? I can assure you that he will be able to offer her all those luxuries she is entitled to,' when he seized my hand and told me that he was delighted. I confess I was a little fearful that he would not be; this is embarrassing."

"Brother Aachy felt that you were insulted, that the honor was too great a one to be declined by Winsome," said Mrs. Canning. "Oh, I am so awmitly ashamed of Brother Archy!" And she rushed from the room.

"She gwine to faint—she dead-white," said Taffy, running after her.

Miss Ben and the judge were left alone.

"You don't wonder that the young lady ran away from me, Miss Benjamina?" the latter said, a little dolefully. "I'm the last man to offer myself to a lady much younger than myself. When I was only thirty-six, I fell in love with a girl of sixteen. 'Well,' I said, 'I'm too old for her. She will think so,' so I just kept on loving her and never said a word. That is why I am a bachelor—she must be thirty. The difference is greater than ever, for I am fifty. Ah, I presume she would fly away, too, if she thought I wanted to cage her."

He had drawn very close to Miss Ben now; his fingers delicately touched her shoulder.

"What do you think?" he queried.

"I do not believe she would, Judge Spencer," she answered, in her soft, sweet Southern drawl.

"I have loved you fifteen years, my dear," he said; "but you refused so many men, I was afraid."

"I refused them for your sake," whispered Miss Ben.

"'Dumb swans, not chattering 'pies, do lovers prove;'

They love indeed who quake to say they love.'" quoted the judge; then their lips met.

In five minutes more Judge Spencer was galloping after his friend Archibald Tudor. Together the two men overtook Jack Sylvestre and his bride, and brought them back in triumph to the old plantation, and there was neither shooting nor suicide, but only feasting and merriment. And the marriage of Miss Benjamina Tudor to Judge Lionel Spencer is still spoken of as the most magnificent that ever took place in the county.

"An' my Miss Ben," says Taffy, "was de mos' splendiforous bride de sun ebber shined on."—Mary Kyle Dallas, in the New York Ledger.

summon the soldierly qualities exhibited by those whose graves we decorate and by the veterans who live still and give them a place in our everyday citizenship.

In addressing you at the beginning, I think I rightly linked together the name of the Grand Army Post and that of the Woman's Relief Corps. The men fought the battles, but there fought in them and helped to make them heroes the inspiration of distant firesides where worked and prayed the mother, wife, sister and lover. And when they were carried wounded from the battle field, gentle hands were ready for the ministration of love. In this service of good citizenship women's inspiration, if not her vote, must also have a part. She must instil into it some of its sweetest, noblest sentiments and some of its most pervasive power.

Veterans, we greet you again. Your heads are becoming whiter, your ranks are thinning. You cannot be to us living examples many years longer. We ask you to crown to the end the noble service from '61 to '65 with your citizen service into which you put all your soldierly qualities. You passed from citizen to soldier and from soldier back to citizen again according as your country had need. This is the lesson you have already taught us—to serve the country's need whatever it may be; and this we expect you to teach us to the end.

May God bless you every one. And may your last days spent in a peace for which you gave your service and offered your lives, be rich in present happiness and undying hope.

SARCASTIC POSTAL REGULATIONS.

A postmaster in a small country town recently exercised his ingenuity and found vent for his humor at the same time by posting up a new set of rules in his office. They were:

Ink bottles may be corked when sent by post.

It is unsafe to post apple or fruit trees with the fruit on them.

As all postmasters are expert linguists, the addresses may be written in Chinese or Hebrew.

Persons are not compelled to lick their own postage stamps and envelopes—the postmaster will do this for them.

Persons are earnestly requested not to send post cards with money orders attached, as large sums are lost that way.

It is particularly requested that lovers writing to each other will please confine their gushing rhapsodies to the inside of the envelope.

Nitroglycerine must be forwarded at the risk of the sender. If it should blow up in the postmaster's hand, he cannot be held responsible.

When watches are sent through the post, the sender should put a notice on the outside—the postmaster will then wind and keep them in going order.

When sending a money order in a letter, always write full and explicit directions in the same communication, so that any person getting the letter can draw the money.

When letters are received bearing no direction, the persons for whom they are intended will please signify the fact to the postmaster, that they may at once be forwarded.—London Tit-Bits.

ANCIENT MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

In the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York city, there is an interesting collection of musical instruments of all nations, many of which belong to past centuries. They lie silently in their glass cases; the strings of mandolins and lutes that made sweet music in days gone by are broken and twisted, and the fingers that once swept them have passed away, but the air seems trembling with melody. Imagination pictures the banquet-hall; the summer nights when the troubadour sang songs under his lady-love's window; or the Bedouin camp in the desert, where the flute and guitar were played during the evening hour of repose. There are instruments here of all characters: rude violins and banjos, fashioned by savage hands, and dainty lyres inlaid with gold and mother-of-pearl—instruments which have played their part in ancient ceremonies in far away India and China, in the castles of the Middle Ages, and in the African wilderness. It is interesting to note that all nations, in shaping musical instruments, have tried to make them beautiful to please the eye as well as to produce sweet sounds. The stringed instruments and flutes of savage races are often grotesque, and even ugly, to civilized eyes, but the poor savage did his best. He carved his instrument as well as he could, and also often adorned it with whatever precious trinkets he had in his possession.—H. S. Conant, in May St. Nicholas.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with la grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

PRAISED WHENEVER USED.
C. L. Seaver, of Birmingham, Conn., says: "For building up a weak or debilitated constitution, I know of nothing so sure and good as Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It makes flesh and strengthens the body."

INTRODUCING
A. A. Shepherd and Dr. Scott.
THE GREAT NEW YORK SPECIALIST —THE DOCTOR PREVAILED UPON TO HAVE HIS GREAT REMEDY PLACED IN THE HANDS OF THE DRUGGISTS.
This is the most wonderful production of medical science in the nineteenth century. This is not a patent medicine, but a prescription compounded on scientific principles and used by Dr. Scott in his extensive practice for the cure of all blood diseases. The cures wrought by it are simply wonderful, and attracted thousands to the doctor's parlors for treatment.
To such an extent is the demand upon the time and attention of the doctor for this medicine from people who could not visit New York city that it became a matter of duty to devise some plan by which the general public could be supplied with this genuine valuable remedy, and for this purpose A. A. Shepherd has been called to arrange with LeGro & Lynde of Palmer, to permit them to keep in stock and sell this wonderful blood remedy. This is purely vegetable, an excellent tonic and builder, a blood purifier unexcelled as a nerve tonic nothing can equal. Dr. Scott has devoted his life to the thorough knowledge and understanding of blood diseases.
A few of which are named here: Kidney disease, liver complaint, sick headache, muscular rheumatism, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, constipation, scrofula, syphilis, cancerous humors, pain in bones, catarrh, salt rheum, pimples on face, general debility, boils, dizziness, female weakness, malarial poison.
The above named druggists have received their first consignment, and wouldi nvite all persons to call and become acquainted with the merits of a perfect remedy. The Loved One's Name

The youth sat there in his easy chair,
And from doze fell to slumber deep.
A smile played over his features fair,
And he murmured in his sleep.

Two friends came in, and he did not wake,
But uttered again—a name.
They did not distinguish the word he spake,
But a laugh to their gay lips came.

Why, he was a fellow that scoffed at love,
When the boys used to tell their tales;
He'd say that friendship was far above
The love that at most times fails

Yet here he was, their comrade dear,
And they heard in his sleep there came,
As if he appealed to some loved one near,
From his lips a fond murmured name.

"Ha, ha!" they cried, we've his secret now.
He can love just the same as we;
And when he wakes he must sure allow
That in love matters all agree."

Then they softly stept, and they nearer came,
And each slyly nudged the other;
Once more a longing voice called the name—
This time they heard it—'twas "Mother."

Ah, all serious now their faces grew,
They had mothers loved of their own,
And in sympathy silently they withdrew,
And the dreamer was left alone.

WHY HANNAH DIDN'T GO.

The report started in Blake's store. To disbelieve a report that started in Blake's store was an unheard-of heresy at the Corners. So, astounding as this was, the Corners received it without a shadow of doubt. It hardly needed to be known that Mrs. Goodrich herself was the authority.

She was down at the store Saturday afternoon as usual to make her weekly purchases. Anson Blake, who never failed when groceries were purchased to conduct the customer to the other side of the store to look at the dry-goods, and vice-versa, endeavored to lead Mrs. Goodrich over to look at some new winter goods. Then it came out. With a bit of pardonable pride she let him know that she had no need to look at fall goods in Witham Corners, or in Witham Centre either, since "her Hannah was going to the city next week to do their fall shoppin'; that she, Hannah, had an aunt there, who had the whole summer been urgin' her to come, and that now she was goin' for a few days."

Mrs. Goodrich shook her large skirts and swept out—figuratively speaking, of course, as her garments always escaped the floor by some inches.

Meeting was hardly over the next day before Hannah was interviewed as to her intended trip, and the ladies who were not present in the morning interviewed her in the evening on the subject. They were so numerous then, and kept her so long that Jerry Downing, waiting impatiently for her outside, concluded she had gone out the back-door on purpose to cut him, and walked home with another girl. His mother, who had not been on speaking terms with Mrs. Goodrich since that good lady made some remarks on the strength of the butter Mrs. Downing brought to the minister's donation last winter, let Jerry know when he got home of Hannah's intended trip, and suggested that a girl who couldn't buy her winter dress at the Corners, but must go to New York for it, was too fine to be a farmer's wife. Jerry went to bed in despair, while Hannah was crying herself to sleep, wondering how she could have offended him.

The next afternoon, when she came in from her school, Hannah was more than surprised to find Mrs. Downing in the sitting-room with her mother. As the visitor had not been in their house for a year, Hannah was sure that she bore some message from Jerry, and greeted her accordingly, wondering meanwhile why her mother looked so grim, and knit as furiously as if the whole family were barefooted and suffering.

It was no message from Jerry, however, that brought Mrs. Downing there to-day. The lad was ploughing in a distant field and did not know of his mother's call. After her little remark last night about Hannh's city shopping tour she had thought best to keep this visit a secret from him.

"I was just telling your ma," she began, when Hannah, flushed and expectant, was seated, "that I'd been down to Blake's to get my winter dress, and that there wa'n't a thing there I'd put on my back."

"Oh, not a thing!" Hannah assented, quickly. "I'm going to New York for our winter things."

"So I heard; and I was telling your ma that, as long as you are going to town and going a shopping, buying one more dress wouldn't be no more trouble to you."

Buying a whole wardrobe for Jerry's mother would have been a delight!

"Oh, no trouble—a pleasure!" Hannah cried, despite her mother's frown.

"There's that brown merino I got three years ago this fall," Mrs. Downing went on.

"The wear I've had out of it just beats all. I've worn it steady wherever I went. I was telling your ma that I didn't know as I could be suited better than to have another one just like it. So, if you won't mind getting me ten yards of dark brown merino—say, about eighty cents a yard—or you might go as high as eighty-five—I'd be much obliged, and will do the same by you."

"Don't mention it!" cried Hannah, taking out her note-book, and adding this small item to the long family list.

"The money'll be all right," added Mrs. Downing.

"Of course it will," Hannah laughed.

"Going to stay long?"

"From Thursday to Monday only. I can't leave my school longer."

"I'll be over, then, Monday night after it."

"Waal, I must say," Mrs. Goodrich burst out, as the door closed after Mrs. Downing, "she's got brass! The idea of her askin' you to lug a dress up from the city for her! I didn't give her any encouragement when she spoke to me about it, I can tell you."

"Oh, mother, I wouldn't refuse for the world," Hannah returned. "How could I?"

Tea was over. Mrs. Goodrich was washing the dishes, Hannah drying them, when the kitchen door was unceremoniously opened. A tall, gaunt woman, with a commanding air, as if she were at the head of a disorderly regiment, marched in. It was Mrs. Moore.

"I was down to Mis' Downing's," she began, without a small prelude of a greeting, "fur a dish o' tea an' a few minutes set, an' she was tellin' me that Hannah was goin' to the city this week."

"Yes, on Thursday," Hannah answered. "Will you sit down?"

"I hain't no time for a set. Mary she's gone over to her grandmother's, and there ain't nobody to hum to git Moore's supper. Mis' Downing was saying you was goin' to git her a brown mereener."

"Yes."

"I s'pose it won't be no trouble, as you're buyin', to buy me a black mereener, too, at the same time?"

"None, whatever." Hannah's smile was getting hollow.

"How long be you goin' to stay?"

"Till Monday."

"I'll be round Monday evenin' with the money. You can git me seventy-cent stuff, about seven yards."

She departed with as little ceremony as she had entered.

"I told you so—I told you so," said Mrs. Goodrich, as she lighted a candle and went down cellar with the milk. "Ef you do fur one, you'll have to do fur the whole town."

Miss Brown, the dressmaker, dropped in a little later.

"I heerd only just now that you're goin' to York," she said, as if to apologize for not coming sooner, "and that you're goin' to get some things for Mis' Downing?"

"Yes, a dress," Hannah returned, while her mother gave a tremendous "Ahem."

"So I heerd. I don't get to York very often myself, and I'm afraid I'm getting a leetle behind the fashions. It don't pay, you know, for me to get behind," she simpered. Miss Brown was more noted for her simpers than for the correctness of her styles.

"Of course not."

"So I made bold to step 'round and ask you, as you're goin' to the city anyway, an' will be lookin' at the fashions, to just give a look fur me."

"I shall certainly study the fashions well for my own benefit."

"I can't say exactly how many patterns I'd like you to buy me."

"Oh, you want me to buy patterns, do you?" Hannah asked quickly. She was one of the most obliging girls in the world, but this sort of thing was becoming monotonous.

"As long as you're in the city an' goin' right by the fashion stores, I s'pose it won't be no trouble for you to step in and buy a pattern or so? You can get whatever you think is pretty—some sacques, bodies, and skirts, and so on. You can tell better'n I can when you see 'em. You might get about five dollars' worth. I think it'll pay me. I'll let you have the money when you know how much it is, or I'll sew it out."

"While Hannah was silently making a note of this, Mrs. Dobbs, their next neighbor, came in.

"Pretty neighbors are you," was her greeting. "Pretty neighbors! Melie she just come up from the store. 'Ma,' sez she, 'what do yer think? Hanner Goodrich is going to the city a-Thursday, a-shoppin', an' is going to get Mis' Downing a dress. I wonder of she wouldn't but me a felt hat? I'm sick an' tired o' Mis' Miller's hats!' 'Of course she would,' sez I. 'A pretty neighbor she'd be ef she wouldn't.'"

"Why, certainly," said Hannah, trying to call up a smile. It was only the ghost of one that responded, however. "What kind of a hat will Amelia want?"

"She's goin' to leave that to your judgment. Somethin' pretty, and dressy, and stylish, and that'll be becoming to you."

Hannah was dark, with delicate features, and very pretty; Amelia was light, with coarse features, and homely.

"She's willing to go as high as five dollars," Mrs. Dobbs went on. "Still, ef you don't have to spend so much she'll be tickled. Looking around a leetle an' not taking the fust thing that's offered, you kin sometimes save as much as fifty cents.

The school where Hannah vainly strove each day to make the Witham youth learned was some distance from her home, and she took her luncheon with her. She had just settled down to it the next noon when a delicate, withered-looking, long-ago-comely woman entered the room.

Hannah greeted her with her unfailing politeness, hoping against hope that she had not heard of the intended trip.

Mrs. Guion would not sit down. She had run over only for a moment. She had just heard that morning that Miss Goodrich was going on Thursday to the city and wanted to know if she would be willing to do the least bit of an errand there. Would she be so kind?

Of course Hannah could not say no, and Mrs. Guion chose to consider her embarrassed silence an assent, and took from a bag three pieces of silk—blue, yellow, and green, all peculiar shades. Would Miss Goodrich be so kind as to match them in zephyrs? She had vainly tried here and in adjacent towns to do so; but, then, you never could get anything outside of the city, and you could get everything there. Would Miss Goodrich be so kind as to get a half a pound of each.

The very small item of matching three peculiar shades of silk was added to Hannah's list.

She was sewing that evening when Mrs. Clark, the physician's wife, came in. This lady was well off, dressy, but economical and very fussy. All Witham knew that she was hard to please. She would not burden Miss Goodrich for anything, she began, if she could possibly find time to go herself to the city, or if she could get what she wanted in Witham. She had a piece of brown plaid which she would like matched: would Miss Goodrich be so kind as to get the same quality exactly and the same pattern? See? There was that fine stripe—did she notice that? It was bought three years ago—Mrs. Clark did not remember now whether it was in New York or Philadelphia; she had paid a dollar a yard for it, and she would like six yards more.

Mrs. Green from the Corners, Mrs. Drake from the Centre, Mrs. Williams from North Witham, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Cole, one after the other, were ushered into the sitting-room and begged to have a piece of goods matched or something big or little bought in the city. They always knew it would be no trouble for her as long as she was buying for herself, and not one offered to advance the money for the purchase.

After supper on Wednesday evening Hannah wrote out her list in full. She was studying it, a little amused and very much vexed, when her mother entered.

"Ma, I've been counting up," she said.

"Waal?"

"The things I am requested by the neighbors to buy amount, at a rough guess, to one hundred and eighty dollars. They would easily fill three trunks, and the work of hunting for them would occupy me at least four days. Not one has offered a cent in advance or the money to pay expressage. I have just eighty dollars, and two days to spend in the city."

"I told you so—I told you so."

"What could I do? I should have offended every one of them if I had put the case to them as it is."

"Waal, what are you going to do? You're in for it you see."

"I'm not going—that's what I'll do about it. We'll buy our winter dresses at Blake's, as the rest of Witham will, for all me. The next time I make up my mind to go to New York, not a soul in Witham will know it till I am gone, if you please, ma."

Mrs. Goodrich did please. When Hannah went, early the next spring, even Mrs. Downing was not told till the last moment, and then it was because Hannah changed her name to Downing the day she went, and was as pleased as before, of course, to undertake any commissions for Jerry's mother.

"You say you want to make a will?" said the lawyer in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

"But you told me just now that you hadn't a dollar to leave, and that your relatives had all neglected you so that you wouldn't do anything if you could."

"That's just it. I'm going to make a will for revenge. I'll git 'em all tied up in a law suit that'll keep 'em poor all the rest o' their lives."—Washington Star.

A Picture.

Sitting, knitting—
Winding backward, winding forward,
Round the needles white and shining,
Whiter fingers intertwining
Fro and to the mazy thread.
Knitting, sitting, lazy flitting
Sunbeams darting in and over.
Outside breath of bees and clover.
Fingers white and shining thread.
Not more shining, not more twining,
Lightly left where breezes blow it,
Streaks of yellow sunlight through it,
The fair hair and fair bent head,
"Burnished weaves of gold," one said.

Knitting, sitting—
Winding forward, winding backward,
Round those fingers, swift and glancing,
Naught was ever more entrancing,
Something more than mazy thread.
Sitting, knitting, all unwitting,
Something warm and strong and pleading.
Full return demanding, needing,
In the meshes of the thread.
All unwitting, simply knitting,
Reeking not of needles glancing,
Nor of fingers, white, entrancing,
Ah! but lift that fair bent head,
"All unwitting," have I said?—Virginia Boyard Cornell, in New York Sun.

SHUN THE BARGAIN COUNTER.

Did your mind's eye ever rest on the other woman at the bargain counter? Not the weary saleswoman or the motley throng of bargain hunters, but the gaunt, famished spectres in the background, mute protest shining in their sunken eyes, the fortitude of despair stamped on their wasted features. There are among them women bent with toil and years, mothers with babes clasped to their breasts, young girls entering on womanhood, and little children forced from their play to add their paltry earnings to the family fund. In every large city there is a proportionate number of women with an insatiable thirst for getting something for nothing. The injury they do to working women is incalculable.

This mild protest against the bargain habit is the direct result of an incident that came under the writer's notice. A few days ago a young girl said to her (oh, so wearily), "I am completely dishearten ed. I get work, but can't earn car fare at it." Inquiry elicited that fact that she was working in a well-known manufacturing house, making wrappers for 95 cents a dozen! For the magnificent sum of less than eight cents each, this poor little girl was expected to lay six plaits in front, arrange the back in elaborate folds, run in gathered sleeves, finish off with frilled collar, belt, buttons, and button-holes.

"They say you make good pay in there when you get smart," she added; "but I can't make one wrapper a day yet."

Granting that any woman could be nimble enough to make a dozen a day, the "good pay" still seemed to the writer to be a mythical condition, $5.70 a week being hardly a fabulous sum from which to pay for board, clothing and incidental expenses.

"I could get back in the factory," she continued, "but the lint seemed to get into my lungs and make me cough."

There was no complaint in her voice or manner. She was simply marshaling facts, and reviewing her prospects of making a living. She had tried factory life and broke down under the strain; delicate lungs are rather a handicap. She admitted this in a resigned, thoroughly disheartened way, more pathetic than tears.

On taking up the paper the following Sunday, the wrappers were found conspicuously advertised at a figure that might have astonished the reader only for that glimpse afforded into the inner workings of the trade.

The wistful look in that girl's eyes, and the pitiful quiver about her mouth would have made any woman with a woman's heart forever renounce bargains, and firmly resolve to help turn every bargain counter in the country upside down.—Mary B. O'Sullivan, in Donahoe's for May.

HOW THE CONTEST ENDED.

"I'll pay the fare for both, conductor," said one of two female passengers in a cable car, as that functionary made his rounds.

"Indeed you won't, Sue," said the other, as she opened her hand bag and began to look for her purse.

"I think I have the exact change," said the one who had first spoken.

"I know I have, if I can just get at my purse, for I put it in just before I left the house."

"And I'm sure I have a half dollar, for I got it in change not ten minutes ago at the confectionery store."

"That reminds me, dear, you treated me to chocolate soda there, so I must insist on paying your fare this time."

"Indeed, I won't listen to it. The very last time we rode together, I remember distinctly that you paid mine."

"I don't believe I did. I think that was the time before the last, while you paid mine the last time."

At this juncture one of them found a dime and the other produced half a dollar, each adjuring the conductor not to accept the fare from the other. The poor man was bewildered, but a passenger who had not paid yet broke in with:

"If you two ladies are so very anxious to pay some one's fare, one of you can pay mine."

Both glared icily at the interrupter, and the conductor improved the opportunity to collect a fare from each and pass on down the car.

Dea. Wilson had been so busily engaged in reading a sermon in the paper just before church that he dropped into an intense reverie while the minister was eloquently preaching. When the latter, in painting the beauties of the hereafter, became warmed up he cried out:

"Oh, that blessed home—how shall we reach it? Home! Sweet home!"

From the deacon's pew came the refrain: "Sli—i—de! Ngwa—a—a! Sli—i—de!"

"And," continued the minister, "what a blessed thought to be able, in that day, to cry, 'Safe! Safe!'"

"Never teched 'im!" roared from the deacon's pew.

But they knew he was weary from reading sermons, and didn't mind him.

An old woman of undeniable Celtic origin entered a down-town savings-bank the other day and walked up to the desk.

"Do you want to draw or deposit?" asked the gentlemanly clerk.

"Naw, oi doant. Oi wants to put some in," was the reply.

The clerk pushed up the book for her signature, and, indicating the place said, "Sign on this line, please."

"Above it or below it?"

"Me whole name?"

"Yes."

"Before oi was married?"

"No, just as it is now."

"Oi can't wroite."—Boston Transcript.

The Journal.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 15, 1894.

PALMER NEWS.

LOCAL NOTICES.

At the Weeks House a bankrupt stock of fine harness, with robes, halters, whips, etc., will be sold at public auction at 10 a. m. Friday and Saturday of this week. Mr. F. F. Filmore is acting as agent for the sale, and assures some great bargains at your own price. It will pay every horse owner to attend this sale.

School Matters.

The school committee held its last meeting for this year last Saturday, and much business of importance was transacted. It was decided to close the Forest Lake and Mason schools, as they are too small to warrant the expense necessary to maintain them, and the pupils can be better educated in the center schools. The scholars which have attended the Forest Lake school will go to Thorndike, while two-thirds of those in the Mason district will go to Palmer Center, the rest being unprovided for. Music will be introduced into the schools in September, and a special teacher employed. The school year is to be lengthened to 38 weeks, one being added in March and one in June. It was decided that the grammar school principals should in the future be ladies, as fast as vacancies occur, as it is found that they will stay longer than the men, who usually leave after two or three years of service, which is a detriment to the school. A new departure is also to be made next year in the placing of one pupil-teacher in each grammar school at $3 a week, to be trained for future service. These are to come from high school senior girls who may wish to teach, preference being given according to rank in school. The examinations for admission to the high school will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday of next week at the grammar school building in the Depot village, at 9 a. m. To gain admission to the high school an average of 70 per cent must be maintained, no study to fall below 50 per cent. The examination will count one-half, and the applicant's school record for the past year will count one-half. The examinations will be in spelling, grammar, history, geography and arithmetic. The salaries of the teachers were increased as far as the appropriation would allow, as they have been too low to hold good teachers here. The high school principal is advanced from $1400 to $1500, and the assistants from $500 to $550; the principals of the grammar schools are advanced from $450 to $522 50; ten teachers who have been getting $315 each will receive $380, one is raised from $315 to $356, and one from $315 to $332 50; in two of the district schools the teachers have been receiving $256, and in two others $315, but all will hereafter receive $285. All the old teachers were reappointed with the exception of three, two of these not being needed on account of closing two of the schools. The list is as follows, the name of the school which is given being where they taught the past year, as there will be some shifting about in the district schools when the new year begins: High school, A. W. Thayer, Miss A. L. Fisherdick and Miss E. M. Pierce; Palmer grammer, Mrs. E. E. Cady, Miss A. J. Wallace, Miss M. J. Sedgwick, Mrs. E. S. Leach, Miss L. F. Brown; Three Rivers grammar, G. A. Adams, Miss A. L. Walker, Miss C. B. Clark, Miss K. M. Twiss; Thorndike, H. M. Dean, Miss E. W. Moffatt, Miss Lucy A. Talmadge, Miss Maud Murdock, Miss S. B. Thayer; Bondsville grammar, H. E. Fuller, Miss J. E. Shea, Miss M. T. Shea, Miss M. A. Martin; Palmer Center, Miss A. E. O'Conner; Shorley, Miss B. M. Dowd; Whiting, Miss A. A. Bishop; Mason, Miss J. E. Twiss.

Children's Day at the Churches.

Last Sunday was devoted to the children by all the churches, and at each special efforts were made to interest the little ones. The several audience rooms were handsomely decorated for the occasion, and large audiences were the rule at both morning and evening services.

At St. Paul's Universalist the church was prettily decorated with laurel, daisies and roses. A motto, "He Blessed Them," of laurel leaves on a white ground, was hung back of the pulpit. Rev. Mr. Moulton preached to his second largest congregation of the year on "A Swarm of Be's"—"Be courteous," "Be ye kind," "Be diligent," "Be steadfast," "Be ye followers of God as dear children." He asked the children and older ones of his congregation to hive as it were these be's in their minds and hearts, that their honey might sweeten all their lives and the lives of others. At the close of the sermon ten children were baptized. An interesting concert was given in the evening.

At the Congregational church the decorations consisted of a background of ferns, with blooming plants and cut flowers, many pansies and pond lilies being among them. Rev. F. E. Jenkins spoke to the children on "What Children's Day is For." At the close of the morniag service one child was baptized. In the evening the Sunday school gave an interesting concert.

At the Baptist church the decorations were of potted flowering plants, roses and pansies, and a large audience was in attendance to hear Rev. Mr. Minard, who has been engaged to supply the pulpit until September. In the evening there was the usual concert by the Sunday school.

New Postal Money Orders.

Postmaster Knox has received a supply of the new money orders which on July 1st will take the place of the old ones and the postal notes, and which will be greatly appreciated by users of the mails for the conveyance of money. The orders are printed on white paper, and are of the same general style as an express money order, each order being in three parts, the order proper, which is sent by the payer to the payee, the advice, mailed to the postmaster of the paying office, and the stub, in itself a record of the amount of the order, which is returned to the department at Washington. The orders can be issued for any amount from one cent to $100, and on the left of the form a graduated table of amounts is printed. When an order is issued the clerk separates through this table the order from the stub in such a manner that the amount of the order is indicated on both parts. Several changes, involving reduction of expense to the sender, will be made in the tariff. Up to $2 50 the rate will be three cents, up to $5, five cents; $10, eight cents; $20, 10 cents; $30, 12 cents; $40, 15 cents; $50, 18 cents; $60, 20 cents; $75, 25 cents; $100, 30 cents. In the present money order tariff the rate for amounts between $40 and $50 is 25 cents, between $50 and $60 30 cents, between $60 and $75 40 cents, and between $75 and $100, 45 cents. The new orders are transferable, and are payable at the office to which they are made out or at the office issued. One person or firm can only send three orders in one day.

J., for the Dundee Water Power and Land Co., a fine residence of brick and stone at Peterboro, N. H., for George S. Morris of Chicago, Ill., and a large felt mill at Albany, N. Y., for F. C. Huyck & Sons.

After the election of officers and dinner the members were given a ride about the city and visited the public buildings, ending with a call at the city poor farm, where there are about 400 inmates.

F. W. Harrison, a clerk for C. A. Brown & Co., had a narrow escape from a serious accident Monday afternoon. While going down the cellar stairs he stepped on a cat and fell, striking his head against a brick wall and rendering him unconscious. He was carried to his home on Park street, and not yet returned to work, though he is recovering rapidly.

A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated in St. Thomas's Catholic church Monday morning in memory of Sister St. Clare, a sister of Father Donoghue of Palmer. Rev. Thomas S. Donoghue was celebrant; deacon, Rev. J. F. Fagan of the cathedral at Springfield; sub-deacon, Rev. J. P. McCaughen of the cathedral; master of ceremonies, Rev. D. Mullens of Monson.

The case of B. F. Coffin against the town of Palmer was begun in the superior court at Springfield yesterday. This is for $4000 damages for injuries claimed to have been sustained by a fall in February 1893, on the walk under the railroad tracks over Commercial street. S. S. Taft and J. B. Carroll appeared for the plaintiff, and Gardner & Gardner for the town of Palmer.

Commencing next Monday the milkmen will make two trips a day. And in this connection a good story is told of one housewife who was asking her milkman not long ago when he should commence coming twice a day. "Just as soon as we commence milking twice a day," replied the dispenser of lacteal fluid, who loves a joke pretty well. "Oh, of course; I never thought of that," replied the lady, who evidently had not been brought up on a farm.

Monday and Tuesday were the banner days for heat thus far this summer, the mercury rising to about 95 in the shade, while on Tuesday there was scarcely any vitality in the air, the day being a peculiarly "muggy" one. The nights, however, have been decidedly cool, in delightful contrast to the days. Wednesday night resembled one in October more than anything usually supposed to be in order at this time of the year.

Main street, between Central street and the bridge over the railroad tracks, is receiving a coating of broken stone, procured from the Flynt quarries at Monson. This will make a delightful change from the sand which has been there, and the only regret is that the entire street cannot be treated the same way, but the stuff costs $1 a ton delivered here, and the sum at the disposal of the roadmakers is not large enough to admit of such an extended improvement.

A Primary Sunday School Teachers' Union has been formed among the Sunday schools in this district, Belchertown, Bondsville, New Braintree, Three Rivers and Palmer being represented at the meeting. These officers were chosen: President, Mrs. J. B. Shaw of Palmer; vice president, Mrs. A. M. Osgood of Ware; recording secretary, Mrs. H. F. W. A. Weld, the Converse House block shoe dealer, has arranged to give his customers crayon portraits at small cost—in reality no cost but for the frame of the picture, and the prices for these are decidedly reasonable. Premium purchase tickets which bear marginal figures are given away, the figures to be punched out to correspond with cash purchases. The sums amount to $10 on a card, and when all have been cancelled the holder is entitled to a crayon portrait of self or friend free, the only stipulation being that a frame shall be purchased for it. The sample in Mr. Weld's store is well executed.

A hearing was held in the district court room Wednesday before referees T. M. Brown of Springfield, Andrew Pinney of Palmer and W. H. Bush of West Brookfield in the case of Joseph St. George of Brimfield against S. W. Brown, executor of the will of Mary Livermore, late of Brimfield. Mr. St. George brings a claim against the estate for board and care of Mrs. Livermore for about four years. Mrs. Livermore at death left Mrs. St. George a legacy of about $1200, and all her household effects, and this the executor claims was understood by both parties to be in payment for services rendered, but this St. George denies. E. C. Sawyer of Warren appeared for St. George, and District Attorney Gardner for the executor, Mr. Brown.

A new time table goes into effect on the Boston and Albany road next Sunday, when two new trains will be put on, the 5.28 p. m. for the west, which was taken off some time ago, and the 1.50 p. m. for the east, which was also removed. The changes at this station will be as follows: The 4.17 p. m. express from Boston will not stop here, but the 5 28 will take its place; the accommodation which now leaves at 6.14 will arrive at 5.55 and set off to allow the 6.06 express to pass without stopping. Going east the train now leaving at 1.46 p. m. will go through without stopping at 12.42, and the new train will accommodate the people at 1.50. The express from the west will stop at 6.49. Sunday nights the New York express from Boston will stop here at 6.06.

An earnest and cordial invitation is extended to all present and former members of the church and congregation to attend this gathering, and the present members are to invite by personal letter former members. Among the topics and speakers are: "Our Church," O. M. Graves; "Our Parish," Judge George Robinson; "Our Sunday School," F. A. Royce; "The Ladies' Social Union," Mrs. H. A. Northrop; "Our Prayer Meetings," William Merriam; "Our Eaton Club," Mrs. H. M. Auger; "Our Musical Department," G. W. Ely; "Our Pastoral Committees," G. F. Sedwick; "Our ex-Pastors," C. E. Fish. Other speakers and topics are being arranged for.

A special meeting of the Young Men's Library Association is called for this evening at 7.15, to see about transferring land to the Odd Fellows' Association. The Odd Fellows have agreed to buy the piece of land of the Feeney estate which is bordered by Central, Pleasant and Walnut streets, and propose to build a hall thereon. The library association however claims a strip of land between the street and the land of the Feeney estate, only a few feet wide, but sufficient to control the entrance from Central street to the land which the Odd Fellows wish, it having been deeded to the association by M. W. French for the express purpose of preventing the erection opposite the library building of undesirable structures. Of course no objection can be made to such a building as the Odd Fellows propose to put up, and the library association a few weeks ago voted to deed them the land with the proviso that if at any time it ceased to be used for purposes of the order it was to revert to the association, but the Odd Fellows do not like this stipulation, and the meeting this evening is to see if the land will be given without reservation.

Newton Beers, in his dramatic recital of "Enoch Arden" at the Congregational church Wednesday evening, was not greeted by a very large audience, and the Christian Endeavor society, which managed the entertainment, is thankful that the number to be disappointed was so small. Mr. Beers's part of the entertainment was very well rendered; he is a good dramatic reader, and the audience listened to him with pleasure. His advance agent had done some tall lying, however, and the chorus of Pa.dean singers, which he stated to be a quartette, did not materialize, a female balladist substituting. The stereopticon dissolving views which were set forth as one of the leading features, had dissolved so much that many of them came upon the screen and passed off without their representation being recognized, they being simply a blot. Several other matters which the agent had assured were not forthcoming, and in settling up Mr. Beers refused to take any account of what the agent had promised the society, saying that he would settle strictly by the terms of the printed contract which had been signed, and that the agent, whom he admitted was in his employ and who was present during the performance, could be interviewed afterward, but he could not be found. The society feels that it was imposed upon, and is sorry for any disappointment that the audience may have felt, but does not see how it can be blamed. The company had to telegraph for money in order to settle its hotel bill and get out of town.

Assaulted by a Priest

Rumors of an assault alleged to have been committed on Michael J. O'connor of this place last Sunday afternoon by Rev. F. J. Lynch of Thorndike at the parochial residence of the latter have been going the rounds for a few days, but the matter has been kept pretty quiet and has only just been brought to light. O'Connor was seen this morning and his story is that his wife had taken one sitting in the Catholic church at Thorndike, but that Father Lynch insisted she should take and pay for two. This she declined to do, and several times offered to pay for the one sitting, but that the money was refused by Father Lynch. Last Sunday morning O'Connor with several others was published in church for not paying his pew rent. He was not at church, but heard of it, and not thinking this hardly fair inasmuch as pay for the sitting had been refused, called on the priest in the afternoon to find out about the matter. O'Connor says that he was seated in a low easy chair, and that after some words Father Lynch told him he must hire two sittings; he said he would not, but the priest insisted, and O'Connor finally told him that he would give up the one he now had and have none. After more words O'Connor was told that he was not a good Catholic, and retorted that he considered himself as good a one as the priest, whereupon the latter, who was standing in front of him, struck him with his fist, and followed up the blow as fast as he could. O'Connor rose as soon as he could and tried to ward off the blows, remarking that he should not strike back, as the tenets of the church did not allow the striking of a priest, but that Father Lynch "Well, I'll strike you, I'll strike you," and attempted to reach him with his fists, but failing to do so scratched his face severely with his fingers. O'Connor's face certainly gave evidence of hard usage from some source. Under his left eye was a black and blue spot about the size of a silver quarter, there was another about three-quarters of an inch wide by an inch and a half long over the eye, while still another was plainly visible about his right eye. From the outer corner of his right eye a deep scratch extended an inch or more toward the lower part of the ear, while the whole upper part of his face showed the scars of scratches which were not wholly healed. O'Connor says that the priest followed him up until the housekeeper came and coaxed him to desist. Father Lynch says that it is two years since the seat in the church was hired, and that now a cent has been paid for pew rent. That O'Connor came to his house last Sunday and was decidedly impudent. He asserts that he was talking in a calm manner with the man and giving him some good advice about his church duties, he not being a regular attendant at church, when O'Connor remarked that he was as good a man as the priest. This he says includes a multitude of things, both morally and physically, and that he would not be talked to thus in his own house, so gave O'Connor a few slaps to teach him manners, though denying that he hit him with his clenched fist, scratched his face, or in any way left a mark on him. O'Connor has not been able to work yet this week, and has placed the matter in a lawyer's hands, with the probability that suits for assault and for damages will both be brought against Father Lynch.

MONSON.

Monson Academy's Chance in the Athletic Meet at Amherst To-morrow.

Everything is ready for the athletic meet on Pratt Field, Amherst, to-morrow. If Old Sol will only smile benignantly on this section of the country, the meet can not fall short of being the most successful in the history of the association. The Academy team enters the contest with hearts full of hope and enthusiasm. The team was never so strong as it is now, although several good men were lost by the departure of last year's class. There is no foolhardy confidence, but a deep determination on the part of all to bring back the banner to "have and to hold" forever, if possible.

The team has entries in every event. Burrows and Buscher are Monson's hope in the sprints. This is new work for Burrows, but Buscher has had experience of two years. Stone and Cristy will bear watching in their events, Stone in the half-mile, quarter-mile, and 220-yards dash, Cristy in the half-mile and mile. Brown and Walker are also doing excellent work in the mile. Flint and Phillips are hurdlers for the blue and white, and will be found among those who have a place when their races are over. Monson threatens to foreclose a mortgage which she holds on the bicycle races, and Converse will act as sheriff. Monson has a strong track team, one that can be reasonably expected to score points and send records by the board. But this year as always, the academy team is strong in the field. In the shot put first and second would not surprise Monson, as Austin '94 and Austin '97 can both be relied on to beat the old record by a foot or more. The team has four men in the hammer throw, the Austins, Chisem and Griggs. The poorest one of these four is doing point-winning work. Chisem will be the Caesar of Monson jumpers, as he is entered in all four. He will without doubt take the running broad, for he has jumped six inches further than Converse's record of last year, and none of the others can come near Converse. Buscher and Galivan are doing good work second to Chisem in the standing and running broad. Stone and Glover also assist him in the running high. All these jumpers have been doing excellent work. In the pole vault Monson has two prize-winners in Walker and Austin '97. The old record made by Walker last year has long since been left far down on the uprights by both. Bennett will also vault for Monson, and although rather short for such work, is doing remarkably well and can be relied upon to draw forth as much admiration for his work this year as he did last. Galivan and Buscher throw the base ball in top rank style. Thus it can be seen that Monson has her eye on something in every event, and will spare no effort to accomplish what is desired, the winning of the banner for "keeps." A part of the team leaves to-night at 5.50 to be on hand for the preliminaries to-morrow. A special train will convey the Monson delegation home from Amherst. It was granted on a positive guarantee of 100 persons, and every man and woman who has the interest of the academy at heart should be present with the school colors. The cars will be decorated with a monstrous banner to stretch along the whole side of the car. "Monson Academy" painted in blue on a white ground in letters two feet across. This special train will leave Amherst about 7.30 p. m.

Harry Blackford of the Universalist church, the bridal couple standing under an arch of green, banked with boughs of hemlock and ferns, while the room was profusely decorated with wild flowers and potted plants. The bride looked charming in a gown of cream-colored wool goods, and carried a bunch of syringas. A large number of presents were received, including a silver service from the T. O. T. club of Springfield, of which the bride is a member; money, silver ladle, spoons, cut glass pepper and salt shakes, china ice cream set, cracker jar, and table linen. Children's day was observed at the churches according to the plans given in last week's JOURNAL. The decorations were very pretty, the sermons and music good, and the concerts in the evening entertaining.

The public exercises at the schools this week have been interesting and instructive, and the system of each school having a different day from the rest for entertaining visitors meets with general approval. The attendance has been large, which of course is flattering to both teachers and pupils. Very little truancy has been noticed during the past year, and the truant officers fear that their salaries will be cut down in consequence.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, June 13, 1894.

Defeat once more has been the fate of the bill to compel railroads to issue interchangeable mileage tickets. A large majority was given in the House for the bill, but when the Senate took hold of it they substituted a resolve to instruct the railroad commissioners to investigate the matter, and that will probably be the end of the agitation for this year.

Many people came to the Green Room to see the different plans of elevated road which are there, and it is very much like a mechanic's display at a cattle show. Most interesting of all the plans is that of Capt. Joe V. Meigs, for it is actually in operation by steam, and it is a queer-looking device, with its trucks straddling down the side of the compound girder which makes the track,—one rail being directly over the other one. Moody Boynton's bicycle road also attracts many visitors, and the visit to the exhibition is certainly very entertaining. But what is amusement to the public is serious business for the inventors, and momentous consequences for them are hanging upon the ultimate action of the House and Senate.

Opposition in the House to the Bell telephone bill was no more effective on the second stage than on the first. Efforts were made to add the proviso that the stock must be sold at its market value, but the House was against it, two to one, and the hope of opposition now rests in the Senate alone.

The House has decided that there shall be no change this year in the taxation laws, and this decision is due more to the lateness of the session than to any clear convictions on the merits of the case. One of the members said openly that it was just as well to call it a drawn game this year, admitting that the action of the House was inconsistent in refusing to exempt foreign stocks from double taxation and at the same time refusing to compel foreign corporations to make returns of their stockholders. The House took this advice and was willing to go on record as inconsistant rather than prolong the session and get the censure of the people. Hence it comes back to the people to say whether they most prefer to have the Legislature do the work it was elected to do, or to go home about this time, in any event.

All of the long and hard agitation for a change in the tax laws has thus gone for naught in the Legislature this year, and the result is apparently due to the late date in the session at which the bills were reached. Both sides, as far as the leaders are concerned, regret this very much, for each was hopeful of winning a victory. These taxation matters were very unfortunate in the time they came up. It happened to be on Friday afternoon twice, and once postponement was secured on that account. The next Friday the House would not have the bills postponed, but they would settle the matter in short order. Consequently the people of the rural districts, who are supposed to be in favor of compelling the return of all personal property subject to taxation, have been compelled to live a year longer under the present law, while those who believe that it would not only be an act of pure justice, but would add greatly to the prosperity and wealth of the state to exempt foreign stocks from taxation, have spent a considerable sum for missionary education work and are apparently as far from their goal as ever. The moral for both parties is that they should get their bills reported earlier in the session.

The House stands up for the Norwegian liquor bill on the engrossing stage by a vote of 81 to 67. This is really doing remarkably well for the bill the first year, for it is not often that a reform of such sweeping importance gets such an impetus the first year. The Australian ballot law is a striking illustration of the speedy passage of a reform act, while the fate for the Torrens system of transfer of land titles, which had a more favorable start than the Australian system, but is still far from becoming a law, illustrates how other great matters get set aside without any apparent explanation. The Norwegian bill must now face its fate in the Senate. Its opponents professed certainty of defeating it in the House, but their predictions were not justified by the vote. The Senate, however, has in late years been more susceptible than the House to the power of selfish interests, and there is no doubt that the liquor trade is deadly in its opposition to this plan of taking all the profits away from the present rumsellers. Hence the bill is by no means out of the woods by its passage of the House.

The House of Representatives is in favor of the Meigs system of elevated roads for Boston. This scheme is one of the mysteries of the session. No one seems to know just what the attitude of the West End company is toward it. Opponents of the bill say that the West End is in its favor, and is doing all it can to get and hold perpetual control of transportation through the streets of Boston. On the other hand, the friends of the bill reply that the West End is against it. Each side prefers to regard the West End as an opponent rather than a friend, with the evident idea that votes are easily to be had against the company on general principles. Ugly rumors are afloat, with considerable definiteness, of corrupt means used to procure the passage of the bill, but it will be an accident if anything is stated strong enough to bear publication. Boston's business interests are largely against the Meigs system, and it remains to be seen what power they have in the Senate. It would be a locking of horns there between two capitalistic interests, and they would appeal to the Senate on the same basis. So the fate of the bill is still in doubt.

CARD.—Marcus Keep Corps, No. 145, wish to extend their sincere thanks to the merchants, young ladies and all who so kindly interested themselves in the recent Business Men's Carnival, and by their assistance helped a good cause.

Monson, Mass.

A CARD.—My compliments to the many kind friends in Silver Street, Crow Hill, Moulton Hill, near Brimfield, and near home who so readily responded when persuasively urged, and earnestly importuned to assist on Monday last in relieving me from threatening, irksome official labor, thus enabling me to avoid criticism, vexation, annoyance and displeasure which I might otherwise have been subjected to.

A Big Reduction in the Price of SITKA REFRIGERATORS.

A word about them. They are built in the strongest manner. The inner wall is an odorless wood, tongued and groved so as to make air-tight joints. A thickness of paper is glued around the inner wall. The outside wall is of hard wood, with paper lining, and there is a dead air space between the two walls, thoroughly insulating the refrigerator in one of the best ways known to science. This does away with the objectionable features of a filling between the walls to absorb moistures and become foul, making it necessary to throw away the refrigerator. They are zinc lined and air-tight, which insures ECONOMY OF ICE.

A Word About Reduced Prices!

We have begun a general mark down, which will be extended all over our store and will be in full force for the next 60 days. Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits, Easy Chairs—everything in the way of house furnishings and housekeeping will receive a mark down that will place them at a price lower than was ever known before in the history of our business life.

A Sensible Woman

She's putting the washboard where it'll do some good. She has suffered with it long enough; broken her back over it, rubbed the clothes to pieces on it, wasted half her time with it.

But now she knows better. Now she's using Pearline.

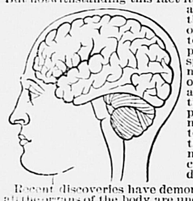
There's no more hard work, no more ruinous rubbing, but there's washing that's easy and economical and safe.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE. Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 352 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, deafness, confusion, pressure, blues, mental melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

A Russian School.

There lived a lad in Moscow,
Named Ivanitch Pacoskow,
Who went to school
And followed rule
Of old Professor Boskow.

His comrades were Wyzinski,
And Feodor Duchinski,
And Scarrovitch,
And Polonitch,
And Paderew Polinkski.

It took Professor Boskow
Full half a day in Moscow
To call the roll
And name each soul
Who came to him in Moscow.

To read and right did Boskow
Next teach the lads in Moscow,
But called to spell
They did rebel,
So queer were names in Moscow.

This roused the ire of Boskow,
Who shook the small Pacoscow,
With Scarroviteh,
And Polonitch,
And Gortachoff Penoskow.

He flogged them all and sent them home,
Did old Professor Boskow,
Till they could well
Pronounce and spell
Each proper name in Moscow.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possible derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo. O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. MATHEMATICAL CHICKEN RAISING.

An elderly man and a young man were sitting on the verander conversing.

"Yes," said the young man, "I am going into chicken-farming. I am convinced that there is no business in the world in which there is more to be made. I have figured on it, and think I know what I can do. Why, look at the way they increase. In four or five years I—"

"My friend," said the old man, "I have had experience in the business. Be warned; do not embark in it. You know not what you do."

"What?" said the young man; "have you tried it and failed?"

"I mean to tell you that I tried it and gave it up," answered the other. "I got 10 hens, intending to get rich, as you propose doing. I installed them in a coop and awaited returns. But before they had laid an egg I happened to pick up a pencil and a bit of paper and do some calculating. At a low estimate I saw that each of my hens could raise three broods the first summer. Allowing for one bad egg in each sitting, there would be 12 chicks to each brood. Calling half of them pullets, this would give six to each brood, or 18 to each hen for the season, or 180 for the entire flock. Adding my original 10, I would have 190 hens at the end of the first summer. Figuring at the same ratio, I saw that I would have 3610 at the end of the second summer. I was encouraged and went on to find that I would have 68,590 when the third summer closed. I sharpened my pencil and bent over my paper with feverish interest. The fourth summer, I discovered, would leave me with 1,303,210 likely hens. When the autumn leaves of the fifth dying summer should swirl about me I would have 24,860,990 cacklers. Another year of joys and sorrows—my sixth—would find me surrounded by 470,158,810 live and enterprising hens. Once again, when the seventh summer should fade into glorious autumn, I found that a matter of 8,938,717,-590 distinct hens and a rooster or two would be with me in the gallinaceous flesh. The inspiring figures for the eighth year I have forgotten, as, likewise, I have those of the ninth. I only know I found that at the end of 10 years I would have more prime hens than there was space for on the surface of the globe, counting the arctic regions, and supposing roosts across all rivers and 20 fowls in each tree. I was dumbfounded. But I did not hesitate. I saw what I owed to the human race. I seized an ax and hurried to the coop. My boy, I loved those hens, but I loved humanity more; and I led them to the block like a Spartan, and chopped off their heads. I breathed more freely when it was all over, and the horrible vision was gone of the whole earth four feet deep in hens, and every blessed one of them cackling. Young man, do not go into the chicken business; it leads to awful things."

The young man started up. "Great Caesar!" he exclaimed. "I won't. I did not realize what I was doing."—From the "Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine for June.

When Bismarck was Prussian delegate to the Federal Diet at Frankfort he took apartments in the house of a patrician of that free city, who held the Prussians in great repugnance; and when Bismarck applied to him to have a bell fixed up in his servant's room he answered that that was not in the agreement, and that if Bismarck wanted a bell he must get it fixed himself, and at his own expense. A few days later a loud report of firearms was heard to proceed from the delegate's room. The landlord, frightened to death, rushes up to the lodger's apartments, and bursting, all out of breath, into Bismarck's study found him seated at his desk before a great pile of documents and calmly smoking his pipe. There was a pistol lying on the table, still smoking at the barrel. "For the love of heaven, what has happened?" asked the frightened landlord, more dead than alive. "Nothing, nothing," answered Bismarck, quietly. "Don't disturb yourself; I was only calling my servant. It is a very harmless signal, to which you will have to accustom yourself, for no doubt I shall want often times to use it again." The bell was fixed up next day.

HIS SENSE OF HONOR.—A Russian peasant was, for some offense or other, declared to have forfeited all special rights and privileges. The full gravity of the punishment was brought home to him as follows: "Henceforth you can never be appointed headman of your village (the peasant bowed), nor be called as a witness (he bowed again), nor serve on a jury (another bow), nor enlist as a soldier."

The peasant bowed deeper still and said: "Your honor, would it not be possible to relieve me of the duty of paying taxes?"

Another version is to the effect that the peasant expressed his thanks and earnestly pleaded:

"Could you not manage at the same time to relieve my son, Mikolka, of these rights?"—Schewerauski Westnik.

THE FEUDAL IDEA.—An English journal tells a good story at the expense of the earl of Derby. While walking on land belonging to the earl a collier chanced to meet the owner. His lordship inquired if the collier knew he was walking on his land. "Thy land? Well, I've got no land mysel'," was the reply, "and I'm like to walk on somebody's. Wheer did tha' get it fro'?" "Oh," explained his lordship, "I got it from my ancestors." "An' wheer did they get it fro'?" queried the collier. "They got it from their ancestors," was the reply. "And wheer did their ancestors get it fro'?" "They fought for it." "Well, begad, said the collier, squaring up to the noble earl, "I'll feight thee for it!"

A lady who has attained considerable wealth was calling on a new neighbor yesterday. She is much given to bragging and was going far beyond any previous effort. The neighbor seemed to be taking it all in seriously, but you can never tell much about a woman. Finally Mrs. Swell said: "Oh, Mrs. Cool, you have such a pretty little home! You ought to be very proud of your home. Why, I can remember when I didn't have much better than this myself." Mrs. Cool responded: "Yes, I think it was when you worked in my aunt's kitchen." The call was perceptibly shortened.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

"But Antonio cannot possibly have said any such thing!"

"I assure you he expressed himself precisely in those terms.'

"And I repeat that it is out of the question (getting excited). Were you present when he said it?"

"No, but"——

"Very well, then; I was present when he didn't."—Motto da Ridere.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Cailloutte, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with la grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

We urge all who are afflicted to procure a bottle, and give this remedy a fair trial. In cases of habitual constipation electric bitters cures by giving the needed tone to the bowels, and few cases long resist the use of this medicine. Try it at once. Large bottles only fifty cents at LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

CORRECTED.—Young Mrs. Gotrox at her first breakfast with her elderly "catch" said to her husband, "You eat with your knife, don't you, John, dear?"

Old Mr. Gotrox (noticing his opportunity and with severity and dignity)—"No, madam, I do not. I eat with my mouth. I frequently convey food from my plate to my facial aperture with my knife, but I do my own eating with my own exclusive mouth, and until further notice I will myself furnish all the instructions about the methods to be employed."—London Tit-Bits.

THIRTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE.
MILLER'S FALLS, MASS.—"At different times during the past thirteen years," said Mr. W. A. Johnson of this place, "my wife has been sick from lung trouble, kidney and liver complaint, ulceration of the stomach and spring debility. At each time she has taken Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and it cured her. It is a family medicine with us and many of our neighbors.

INTRODUCING
A. A. Shepherd and Dr. Scott.
THE GREAT NEW YORK SPECIALIST —THE DOCTOR PREVAILED UPON TO HAVE HIS GREAT REMEDY PLACED IN THE HANDS OF THE DRUGGISTS.
This is the most wonderful production of medical science in the nineteenth century. This is not a patent medicine, but a prescription compounded on scientific principles and used by Dr. Scott in his extensive practice for the cure of all blood diseases. The cures wrought by it are simply wonderful, and attracted thousands to the doctor's parlors for treatment.
To such an extent is the demand upon the time and attention of the doctor for this medicine from people who could not visit New York city that it became a matter of duty to devise some plan by which the general public could be supplied with this genuine valuable remedy, and for this purpose A. A. Shepherd has been called to arrange with LeGro & Lynde of Palmer, to permit them to keep in stock and sell this wonderful blood remedy. This is purely vegetable, an excellent tonic and builder, a blood purifier unexcelled, a nerve tonic nothing can equal. Dr. Scott has devoted his life to the thorough knowledge and understanding of blood diseases.
A few of which are named here: Kidney disease, liver complaint, sick headache, muscular rheumatism, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, constipation, scrofula, syphilis, cancerous humors, pain in bones, catarrh, salt rheum, pimples on face, general debility, boils, dizziness, female weakness, malarial poison.
The above named druggists have received their first consignment, and wouldi nvite all persons to call and become acquainted with the merits of a perfect remedy. Dr. Scott's medicine, when placed in drug stores is sold under the name of Dr. Scott's Sarsaparilla, and all who intend taking a spring medicine should not fail to try Dr. Scott's Sarsaparilla. No pills have to be used with Dr. Scott's.

When Mollie Bathes the Baby.

When Mollie bathes the baby,
I lay my book aside,
And watch the operation,
With deep paternal pride:
I scan the dimpled body
Of the struggling little elf,
For undeveloped points of Resemblance to myself.

When Mollie bathes the baby,
She always says to me:
"Isn't he just as cunning
And sweet as he can be?
Just see those pretty dimples!
Aren't his eyes a lovely blue?"
And then, "You precious darling,
I could bite those arms in two."

When Mollie bathes the baby,
I always say to her:
"Look out now, don't you drop him,"
And she answers back, 'No, sir!'
Then I talk about his rosy cheeks,
The muscles in his arms,
His shapely head, his sturdy legs,
And other manly charms.

When Mollie bathes the baby,
The household bends its knee,
And shows him greater deference
Than it ever shows to me.
But I feel no jealous goading,
As they land him in the skies,
For every one assures me
That he has his father's eyes.

UNDER THE PINES.

Mary Fenton was turning over the leaves of the latest summer novel in a listless fashion as she sat on "The Tavern" porch. The glory of an early June day was about her. Cedar, sugarpine, and dogwood gleaming fresh in their different shades of green from the shower of the day before. S'hasta lilies, wild roses, yellow violets, and myraids of other flowers, clustering in close brotherhood with the timothy grass in the meadow beyond, filled the clear air with a penetrating fragrance. The meadow lark trilled in the tall pines and a small boy reported the finding of a flock of young grouse in the cornfield. The trout were beginning to jump in the Sacramento, and the early anglers were gathered in small groups a distance from her, discussing with deep intentness the respective merits of brown hackle versus royal coachman.

Mary Fenton loathed the tone of the place. It reeked of fish; fish that had been caught or hooked, and fish to be landed. The atmosphere was monotonously fishy. It generally is on the Sacramento, where the trout are wary and men are loyal to flies.

A case of nervous prostration was the ostensible cause of Miss Fenton's removal to the bracing mountain air; if the family Galen had but known it, she was more truly suffering from a severe attack of indecision of mind. Richard Drake was the subject of this wavering, whereby her cheeks were paled and her nights made sleepless.

The hum of the refrain "When I was on the McCloud in '76," "Dolly Varden weighing ten pounds," sounded to her ear like gibberish as she laid her book down in her lap and fell to thinking and arguing with herself, the same old story. Mary Fenton had not been of the toilers of this life, nor did she aspire to that honor. She had been bred in a selfish sort of way, with deepest regard for the great ego. Happiness meant to her smooth sailing; a ripple on the stream, unpleasantness; and unpleasantness—disaster.

In her trim tailor-made gown she formed a natty picture, as she rocked slowly to and fro in a low chair, under the shadow of the hop vines that clambered up the pillars of the piazza. Even the fishermen gave her a little of their admiration, together with the speckled beauties—and the fishermen were not young. The pucker of thought on her brow was rather becoming. In her unconscious pose she presented a picture of the best nineteenth-century cultivation.

The world was very serene to her when Richard Drake drifted into her life. She liked him. He was well introduced, belonged to the Drakes of Boston, was handsome, a trifle unconventional, which she rather censured, and lastly, was a bank clerk with no fortune and cared little for amassing one, a lack of ambition that she could not quite comprehend.

At first he startled her in her quiet, measured existence, then amused, then interested, and finally was the cause of the nervous prostration and mountain trip of the season.

The Fentons had only a fair supply of this world's goods. Young sisters were growing up, and with marriage Mary knew that she had her own way to make. Richard Drake grew more fascinating, but she could not yet decide whether life was worth living with poverty constantly in the foreground; whether things she prized dearest could be given up for one man's sake. This was the problem that troubled her as she sat in deep reflection, until she heard some one address her timidly—

"Would you like some flowers, ma'am?"

Startled, she looked up and saw a young girl, with hands extended full of the wonderful pitcher plant that grows in abundance up the slope of Castle Crags.

"Where did you get them?"

"'Bout five miles from here."

"Did you go yourself?"

Miss Fenton looked curiously at the young girl, who flushed slightly as she replied:—

"'Course. I thought maybe you ladies at the hotel might like to buy some, as the walk's too rough for you."

"I will take them," she said.

The girl was a picturesque figure, tall and slender, with a crop of short reddish curls clustering around her head and straggling over the brim of an old cigarette hat, which was faded into a dull bluish gray, and set well back on her head, leaving the sun a good chance to tinge her face with the rich brown color of health.

She wore an old navy blue blouse with collar turned low at the throat, showing a superb curve. Her short calico skirt was drenched from scrambling through underbrush, and clung close to her figure. Her old canvas shoes were a trifle large for her, and seemed relics together with the hat.

Mary Fenton's face lighted up with new interest as she looked at the lithe, well-poised young figure.

"Why, you've been ten miles this morning, and it is so wet and they say there are rattlesnakes on Castle Crags."

The girl laughed. "Rattlesnakes!" she exclaimed scornfully. Her large gray eyes looked at the speaker in indignant protest. "You don't suppose I'm such a baby to be skeered of a rattler. I've killed many of 'em round our cabin door in Oregon. I've got twelve rattles and a button down at the camp I'll fetch up to show you, if you like, some day."

The fresh voice and honest soul looking out from her great earnest eyes fascinated Mary Fenton, as she drew out her purse to pay for the orchids, and she tried to keep her for a while. Enthusiasm was not good form in Miss Fenton's world, but it might be permitted to another class, and the mountains, rivers, and fishermen were so full of ennui to her just then.

"What is your name?" she asked.

"Kit—Kit Jones," she replied, moving away.

"Do you live in the camp across the road, with the campers who came last week?" Miss Fenton asked with interest.

"Yes," she answered in a lower tone of voice. "There's only me, mother, and Bill. I must go now. I'm the head of the shebang. Bill is sick," a shade passed over her merry, childish face.

"May I come over and see the rattles some day, and will you bring me some Shasta lilies?"

"The white kind that smells?" Kit questioned. "Bill likes them best. Yes, I know the best place for them, up the ridge."

She started away on a quick little run, then looked back, shouting: "You might come this eveing; maybe company will do him good."

She was as graceful as a young deer as she ran across the road and disappeared into a clump of pines, from the midst of which ascended a blue curl of smoke.

The day wore on, and Miss Fenton had not written the letter that she had almost decided was to send Richard Drake to his fate. The long afternoon was coming to a close. Mrs. Pendragon, Mary's aunt and chaperone, had repaired to the spring with her chums for her after-dinner glass of soda-water. The fishermen, after stealthily watching each other's movements, had slunk off, one by one, in different directions, rods in hand, to whip the stream.

Mary Fenton declined all invitations, as she sat watching the blue smoke among the pines, and resolved to stroll over to the camp.

She thought of the invalid, and took some choice fruit which had been sent her the day before, and sauntered across the road.

Before she reached the camp, she heard a dry hacking cough, which foreboded too well the nature of the malady. She stopped a minute before the campers saw her, and surveyed the scene.

There were two tents pitched close together under two big sugar pines, and a little to one side four young saplings had been cut off and roofed over with a covering made of rough grain sacks sewn together. Under that, on a couch made of pine boughs and covered with two or three patchwork calico quilts, lay a young fellow, who looked scarcely twenty-two or three, coughing as if his very soul was racked with pain. It needed but a glance at his sunken cheeks and hollow eyes to tell her that he was doomed. She had seen so many such hopeless cases in Santa Barbara and San Diego.

Kneeling before a very small fire, blowing as if her life depended upon it, knelt Kit. Her hat was thrown on the ground, a red shawl was pinned across her shoulders, and she looked like a young dryad as she puffed at the dull embers. An old woman, with care-worn face and gray hair twisted into a hard little knob, was standing near an improvised shelf cutting thick pieces of fat bacon into a frying-pan.

Mary Fenton felt in a flash that she knew them—"Me, and mother, and Bill"—and felt in sympathy with them. The minor chord in life is very fascinating when it does not vibrate for ourselves.

Kit saw her at last, and sprang up hastily, her cheeks all ame from the exertion, and her short curls, tossed and tangled by the evening wind, standing up like a halo, about her head. Kit was hardly more than seventeen, but well developed for her age, showing the effect of mountain air and training.

"Glad to see you." She extended her hand, grimy with ashes and charred sticks.

The old woman looked up without any interest at the arrival—no light in her faded gray eyes.

"Mother," Kit waved her hand, by way of introduction, in the direction of the frying pan.

The old woman grimly nodded.

"Bill." Her voice softened as she stepped near the couch. The man looked up with a gleam of interest as Mary Fenton came forward and offered him the fruit.

"Thanks." He spoke in a fretful voice, broken by coughing. "I'm powerfully tired of bacon. Them cherries look cool."

Kit's hands hung listlessly by her side. A look of distress crept into her soft eyes. "I know, Bill, it's powerful hard. The bacon is salt and hard; but it's all I can do just now. Maybe to-morrow"—her face brightened—"I'm going to get some lilies for Miss Fenton, and they'll let me have a little beef, just for you, at the hotel."

With a shrug of fretful impatience the man turned his face away from them, and lay silently munching the fruit.

"Your brother is quite ill," Miss Fenton said, as Kit accompanied her across the road.

"My brother! Why, it's Bill!" Kit looked up into her face with surprise, and then said in explanation: "I forgot—everybody knew about us in Oregon. Bill and I are sweethearts—have been since we were little kids. We are going to be married," she straightened herself up with a conical air of dignity, "when Bill gets well." Her voice faltered. "Miss Mary—mayn't I call you that? I heard the old lady at the hotel say your name, and I liked it. Will you walk up the road a piece with me this evening, the way you see Shasta? We see the white mountins at home, and when a lump comes into my throat and I feel a bit down, it does me good to see it up there in the sky, looking down upon me just as it does at home. All the time when we were coming I kept looking over my shoulder, and the white mountain kept following us, as if it was going to take keer of all of us." She drew her sleeve across her eyes, as if to brush away a little moisture, then pulled the old cigarette hat down low over her face, giving it a sort of rough pat. "It's one of Bill's old ones," she said in a half aside.

It was growing dusk. The long shadows of the pines on either side lengthened quite across the road, until their tips were lost in the wide tangle of azaleas and bracken by the wayside.

The Sacramento kept up a gurgle and a rush just below, which blended in with the soft soughing of the pines. Mary Fenton walked close by Kit's side, and waited for her to speak.

"Well, Miss Mary, you are so good to him, I'll tell you just from the beginning; and I think, Miss Mary, I knowed the first minute that I saw you setting there in that rocking chair that you was an angel, and maybe could help Bill.

"Mother and me lived all alone in a cabin in southern Oregon. Father was killed when I was born—spree," she explained shortly. "Mother has always had sort of a misery since. She's never happy, even here. She didn't want to come. Bill's folks lived next to us, 'bout two miles away. Bill's older than me, but he was always sickly; didn't like boys; so when I was big enough we played together and Bill was good to me, and I used to fight for Bill.

"Bill's folks went home to Missouri, and Bill stayed. He's a wood chopper, and me and Bill, we've always loved each other. Me and mother farmed our ground ourselves and we've always been dirt poor; but me and Bill was always happy. You see, Miss Mary, if folks have got each other in this world, they've got all that's wanted. Then Bill took cold, last winter—had a fever. I took him home and nursed him. He was pretty bad. It was a hard winter, wet, and I thought it never would stop. Bill got punier and punier. Mother said it was the way of the Lord, because I was so set on Bill; but, Miss Mary, I knowed better."

They reached the view of Shasta, and walked to a little spot away from the road. Kit picked out a smooth log, folded Miss Fenton's shawl over it, and made her sit down, while she stood facing the great white mountain.

"It kept on raining, and I rode to the doctor's, ten miles from our cabin, and he said to bring Bill here, where the air was dryer, and give him a chance, so I didn't wait, but hitched up to our little wagon and we came. It has rained here, but it ain't going to any more, and he will get well; I know it." Her voice grew more cheerful with hope.

She stood silent for a moment, with face uplifted in thought, and then, noticing the stars begin to come out, one by one, above Shasta, she said: "Why, Miss Mary, it's getting cold. You'll have a chill. We must be going home."

All the way back Kit chatted cheerfully, telling little stories of her home, all entwined with anecdotes of Bill and full of his praises.

As they neared the camp the same hacking cough broke the stillness of the night. Kit started as if it hurt her.

"I shouldn't have left him. Wait a moment, Miss Mary, I must give him his medicine, then I'll see you home."

Miss Fenton declined her offer, as it was only a short distance to the tavern, and as she turned away she heard the querulous tones of the invalid scolding Kit, who answered him with cheery tenderness.

One of the fishermen joined her as she neared the tavern, showing her his basket of two-pounders. Her thoughts were uplifted, and she half absent mindedly admired his booty and sought her room.

Poor little Kit, ignorant, half-formed child, had raised Mary Fenton to heights she had not dreamed of. If Richard Drake had been there that night to press his suit she could have put herself in the background and been ready to face the world with him.

Daylight often brings us down from our pedestals; so it was with her. She was not quite so sure in the morning. It is easier to be heroic by the moonlight than in the clear rays of the mid-day sun.

The letter was still unwritten, but the mountains possessed a new interest for her.

Mrs. Pendragon wrote privately to Mr. Fenton that Mary was gaining color and appetite, and never mentioned the objectionable young man, but turned her attention to a "dirty lot of Oregon campers."

Kit ran in for a few moments every day bringing white Shasta lilies, rare ferns from "away up Soily creek," or burning tiger lilies, regal in brown and gold; and Miss Fenton kept the invalid, who was rapidly failing, supplied with dainties.

She found out very soon that Bill was commonplace and selfish. He had a rather handsome, weak face, and Kit was blind to his weaknesses and faults. He grew so much worse that Kit could hardly leave him at last. The weather was warm, and she worked all day and often sat up all night to watch by his side and humor his fancies. He was not able to walk; the dry air could not help. And then Kit never came to the tavern, and Mary Fenton went to her every day.

Mrs. Jones fretted to go home. "Bill's as good one place as another," she grumbled; but Kit clung to the belief that there he must get well.

As the days passed on the sick man grew weaker, and weaker, and more fretful. Kit sat by him all the time, his hand in hers. There were dark rings widening under his eyes from sleepless nights, and the young cheeks were growing hollow. Mary Fenton saw with a pang that the slender fingers which she ran through the curly crop were growing pitifully thin.

Kit had become very dear to her. She could not bear to see the bright young life merged into this dull sadness, and she felt helpless. Kit would not believe what was shortly coming. Every time that Miss Fenton came with something tempting and the sick man refused it she would say, with a ghost of the old, merry laugh: "You've spoilt him, Miss Mary; nothing's good enough now."

The gay tavern life went on. Mary Fenton joined in the drives and walks, danced and moved on with the rest of the summer guests, but her heart was with Kit, under the pines.

"What do you see in that little curly-headed Oregon girl?" one of the fishermen asked laughingly.

"My better self," she answered, and passed on.

The weather was very sultry. The jagged peaks of Castle Crags stood bare and gray against the deep blue sky. Not a breeze stirred. Even the river moved sluggishly, like oil. July had been ushered in by a north wind, and that always means dry, enervating, lifeless heat.

The ladies lounged around the tavern piazza in cool, white muslin, with palm leaf fans and iced lemonades near at hand, and growled vehemently. The fishermen wiped the perspiration from their foreheads, assorted their flies, and each tried to outvie the other in new fish stories.

Mary Fenton sat a little to one side, overcome by the heat and giving up the idea of seeing Kit that day. Again her book lay idly in her lap and she sat dreaming.

Coming up the road in the hot, dazzling sun Kit walked slowly through the dust, her hands clasped together and her eyes staring intently down at the ground. She walked so slowly she seemed hardly to move.

"Miss Mary." She spoke in hollow tones, without looking up. "Miss Mary, I've come to tell you. Bill's gone—last night——" Nothing but dull apathy in her face, not a sob to break the silence. She stood full in the heat, a broken, lifeless figure.

Mary Fenton started. "I did not think that it would be so soon, dear." She went down the steps, close to the girl, and took her hand. "Come out of the sun. Come."

Kit raised her eyes, a depth of sad reproach in them. "Do you think I would leave him now, Miss Mary?" she continued in the same monotonous tone, as Miss Fenton hastened to get her hat to accompany her.

"Don't come, Miss Mary; I would rather you would not. I must be alone, for a little while," she faltered. "Mother 'lows we get along home day after to-morrow, and we must leave him. I come to you—to fix things."

Mary Fenton pressed her hand warmly in hers in assurance of help.

"If you wouldn't mind, Miss Mary, couldn't it be where he might see the mountain. You know I can see it at home, and it would be something for us to have together.

"Yes, dear child, I will do anything for you."

Mary Fenton's eyes were brimming over with tears as she stood still in the sunshine and watched the young figure bent with grief, disappear slowly among the pines.

"Such devotion, such unselfishness, such bravery, is Godlike," she murmured to herself. "She asked for nothing and gave everything—poor child!"

Miss Fenton attended to Kit's request, and the day after Bill was laid at rest on a hillside where the gleam of Shasta could always be seen.

The next morning she went to the camp and found Mrs. Jones busily packing up, more cheerful than usual. The tents were down and Kit was lifting the heavy things with her strong, young arms and tying them into the wagon. She wore the same old blouse and cigarette hat, but all the buoyancy was gone from her face. She was very

District Court.

One civil entry was made in the district court last Saturday, Nancy Ormsby against Austin M. Chapin, both of Monson. The case of Lepheron Chevalier against C. T. Brainerd for the smashing of a bicycle was tried. Mr. Brainerd was coming from Three Rivers with a pair of wheels fastened to the rear of the road scraper. The traveled track made by the teams in the road was at the left side, and in this the scraper was being drawn. Outside of the team track was a path used by pedestrians and bicyclists. Chevalier met the scraper and passed it all right, but in some way managed to collide with the wheels attached at the rear, and sued Mr. Brainerd for damages, claiming that he should have turned out. The case was tried before Justice Newton of Monson, who decided for the defendant, on the ground that Chevalier did not use due precaution; an appeal was taken.

In the criminal court last Saturday Joseph Long, for larceny from the person in a building, was bound over to the September term of the superior court in $500 bonds. Long had been treated to drinks several times by William McGurk, who finally became somewhat under its influence and went to Long's home, where he was given more "booze" and finally spent the night there. In the morning his money was gone, and on making a fuss about it Long returned $7. John Sullivan and Daniel Sugrue, for drunkenness, were placed on probation until July 28th. Ernest F. Harworth, for the larceny of a camera in Monson, was fined $25, but appealed. On Monday Charles F. Crawford, a miikman of Wales, was fined $10 for cruelty to his horse, and appealed. Timothy Danihy of Monson paid $5 for drunkenness. On Tuesday Thomas Sullivan of Bondsville was assessed $10 for an assault on Michael J. Sullivan, the proprietor of the hall. A party of Polanders had engaged the hall for a wedding celebration, with the stipulation that "no Irish need apply." Thomas attempted to enter, and when Michael attempted to put him out Thomas seized him by the throat and attempted to stick his thumb through the other's windpipe. George Reynolds of Holland, proprietor of the hotel there, was charged with larceny from the person of one Pratt, pleaded not guilty, and will have a hearing to-morrow. The same defendant was also charged with the illegal keeping of intoxicating liquors, and will be tried to-morrow. A raid was made Saturday night by Sheriff Studley and Special Officer Merriam of Palmer, and a quantity of liquors seized. On Wednesday John Conroy of Three Rivers gave up $5 for too freely indulging in intoxicants.

Donahue—Gerald.

A very pretty wedding took place yesterday afternoon, the contracting parties being Thomas F. Donahue, and Josephine, eldest daughter of Mrs. George Gerald. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Francis J. Lynch at the parochial residence. The bride looked charming in a gown of white crepe, trimmed with silk and lace, and wore a necklace of gold beads which were over 75 years old, having been worn by her grandmother at the time of her marriage. She carried in her hand twenty-four white carnations. The bridesmaid, Miss Annie Dunn, was dressed in a white cashmere gown trimmed with lace, and also carried carnations. John F. Wagner was best man. A dinner was served at the home of the bride, which was attended by members of the family only. The newly married couple are well known in town, and have many friends who wish them every happiness that the occasion can afford. They left on the 4 p. m. train east, and will spend their honeymoon in the eastern part of the state. LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, June 20, 1894.

By virtue of the weakness of human nature by which it is easier to take money out of the state treasury than out of one's private pocket, though the state treasury is filled only by money from the private pockets of all of us, the system of state highways has been given a grand push forward. House and Senate are in practical accord, and the state is fully committed to the policy of road-building. Three-quarters of the expense must be borne by the state in any event, while the counties must pay each 25 per cent of the cost of the new road made within their limits. Construction will be begun speedily, without question.

Mr. Kneil of Westfield defended again his hobby of abolishing the death penalty, and cited illustrious names of martyrs unjustly put to death, but the House after debating the matter over half an hour, gave a decided majority against him. This cause seems to make no progress in Massachusetts.

From good authority it appears that there has been a powerful lobby at work for the Meigs elevated road bill, and that the work has been done all over the state, as well as at the state house. This appears to be a case like the division of Milford for the incorporation of the town of Hopedale, where the greatest precaution has been taken from the start and a great deal of effort put forth early in the season, so that it should not be necessary all at once near the end of the session. Such work wins, and if it is to be overcome there must be the same untiring activity and the same shrewdness in bringing men around.

In the last hours of the session, when the call of the people is heard very plainly to the Solons to come home, and when the Solons are over anxious to go without any calling, the people must expect that some unfortunate action will be taken. For instance, here is the school house license bill (to amend the present prohibition of a saloon within 400 feet of a school house on the same street so as to measure around the corner) on which the two branches were unable to agree. A conference committee was appointed and they reported that they could not come to a common ground. Then a motion was made by Mr. Spalding of Cambridge for another conference committee, to see if new men would not be able to unite. But who wants to fuss with another committee, just at the end of the session? Let it go. And so another temperance measure is killed by sheer hurly burly, apart from its merits.

The Norwegian license bill failed by the close vote of 16 to 17 on the reconsideration on Wednesday of its defeat Tuesday by the vote 13 to 20. Its friends are very indignant that some of their supporters have not stood by them to the end, and they say that if some of the men from Springfield who were so anxious for the bill had come to its succor Wednesday forenoon they would have saved the bill. But to come even as near as they did to a reconsideration they were obliged to promise to amend so as to make the bill apply to only those cities which had voted for license for the last five years in succession. President Butler, who was friendly to the bill in its early stages, gave a vote against reconsideration. But, though the friends of the bill are defeated, they have had unexpected success the first year. They carried their bill through the House by a good majority on three stages. They advanced it one stage in the Senate by 19 to 13, and only failed by one vote to get it through. Defeat was accomplished by the union of the liquor and the extreme temperance interests. Next year the present agitation will have borne fruit. Some false statistics from Sweden against the bill will be exposed, the lines will be formed anew and the impetus of this year will be a material aid in the passage of this reform measure which strikes at the very root of the liquor trade by taking away the temptation of personal profit to the seller, and making the bartender's success depend upon the smallness of his sales.

Another important matter, a labor measure, has been passed by the House after a warm debate only to be killed by the Senate in these closing hours without debate at all, by 15 to 20, on a roll-call. It was a bill to require specifications to be furnished to weavers, and was much desired by them.

The bill to pay witnesses who are detained in jail, who are innocent of any offence, which the House passed by a large majority, has been thrown out unceremoniously by the Senate. So has the bill to permit cities and towns to buy up existing lighting plants at the cost of duplicating them. The House spent hours on it, the Senate hardly as many minutes, and it must go over to next year.

The House enacted the Bell telephone bill after a stubborn fight Wednesday forenoon by a vote of 60 yeas to 114 nays on striking out the enacting clause, and without a division on enactment itself. The Senate then enacted it promptly.

The state tax this year will be only $2,000,000, instead of $2,500,000 as last year, —a reduction most acceptable in these hard times.

MONSON ACADEMY COMMENCEMENT.

A Full Account of the Doings of the Week.

The commencement exercises of Monson Academy began Sunday evening, when Rev F. S. Hatch preached the baccalaureate sermon to the school in the Congregational church. Seats had been reserved for the school, and they marched in from the chapel, headed by the seniors. Mr. Hatch took for his text Genesis xxxvii: 5, "And Joseph dreamed a dream," his theme being "The Visions of Youth." Such visions are not to be despised, but encouraged and cultivated. The greatest visions are not a substitute for character or energy. On the other hand it is no valid objection that they are not distinct. God ordained haze and uncertainty regarding some things as truly as clearness and certainty regarding others. No soul should be fettered by the small range of truth that is absolutely clear, but should include in his thinking those outlying nebulae whence new stars will emerge.

After noticing that visions are not a substitute for character, and that it is no objection that they are dim, the speaker proceeded to unfold their scope and influence. First, they concern the individual and the race. Personality is profoundly influenced by the dreams that invite and inspire and illuminate the youth of to-day. Great visions also include the advance of humanity and are the continual heralds of love, progress and reform. Second, the visions of youth concern every experience and occupation of life. Pain is made endurable, disappointment loses its bitterest chill, opposition does not daunt the man who is upheld by great visions of the future. Every calling has need of the incentive and support of the coming glory. Teachers, authors, statesmen, reformers must have these visions, but so must farmers, artisans, merchants, if they would enter the fulness of life and reap the largest rewards. Third, men of visions large and true were never more needed than to-day. A practical age will fall into the worst decay unless it is balanced by those whose visions are continually publishing the ideal and summoning men to the realization thereof. True the dreamers will be scoffed at and opposed, but they will be followed in the end. "Behold this dreamer," sneered the brothers of Joseph, but they all bowed down before him at last. Fourth, the achievement is greater than all our youthful dreams. Literal fulfillment of all our visions is not always secured. The patriarchs "received not the promises." But something larger and better is secured. No sheaves bowed down to Joseph; no stars made obeisance. But he became worthy of a nation's homage and saved the Hebrew people from starvation, thus giving to the world an indestructible family. All great dreamers and in the same class, achieving, like Paul and Columbus, vastly more than they dreamed. A personal address to the class followed. The singing was in charge of Mrs. A. D. Norcross, who was assisted by Frank H. Mason, tenor, of Worcester, Misses L. J. and Ella Williams, Miss Cantwell, Miss Coleman and Mr. Watson, in addition to the regular choir, making 20 voices in all.

The class tree exercises were held at 7 o'clock Monday evening on the campus, a large number being present. The tree essay was written by Miss Alice M. King, but as she was ill and unable to be present, it was read by Miss Mabel F. Tucker, the audience being seated on the ground. After this they adjourned to the chapel and the class history was read by Miss Florence J. Devevell. The prophecy which was decidedly spicy, was given by Robert O. Watkins. The singing of the class ode, composed by Miss Ethel E. Newton, closed the exercises.

The graduating exercises were held in Memorial Hall at 10 a. m. Tuesday, the programme of which was given last week. The platform was prettily decorated with ferns, laurel and daisies, the motto of the class being suspended from the proscenium arch, while at the back of the stage hung the banner which the athletic team won for the third time last Saturday at Amherst. The members of the class sat at the left of the stage, while at the right were the teachers and members of the board of trustees. The diplomas were presented by Rev. P. W. Lyman of Fall River, president of the trustees.

After the graduating exercises the annual alumni dinner was served in the vestry of the Methodist church, about 125 attending.

After the dinner Prof. James H. Tufts of Chicago University, one of the alumni, acted as toastmaster, the following toasts being responded to: "Early Days of the Academy," Henry Barnard, L.L. D.; "The Old Building and the New," Miss Mabel Anderson; "The Academy as Distinguished from High Schools," Rev. G. S. Rollins; 'Coeducation," Mrs. Rufus Leach; "Old Memories," Miss Smith; "The Old Students," Rev. C. H. Woodworth; "Class of '84," Miss Morris; "Class of '94," L. H. Austin; "What Next?" —for the Academy, Prof. Burke, for the alumni, Dr. F. W. Ellis.

The treasurer announced the receipt of valuable gifts during the year, a $1000 scholarship from Mrs. Hadassah Dewey, $7000 from Mrs. Field, and $25,000 from Mrs Cyrus W. Holmes, Jr. These officers of the Alumni association were chosen: President, Rev. Julius Ward; vice president, D. F. W. Ellis; secretary, T. L. Cushman; treasurer, E. F. Morris.

The senior reception Tuesday evening was a very successful affair. The attendance was unusually large, many of the younger alumni being present. Miss M. Esther Keep, Miss Newton, Mr. E. B. Flint and Mr. L. H. Austin received for the class, and Miss Mabel F. Tucker, Miss Annie L. Rathborne, Carl M. Blair and Robert O. Watkins were ushers. The Philharmonic Orchestra of Springfield furnished music, and the Virginia Reel, marches, and conversation were the order of the evening. Many of the dresses worn by the ladies were very handsome.

MONSON, MASS.

The committee asks for more funds for instruction in music and elocution, and for work in manual training and physical culture. Watts of California and from Prof. Cummings of Howard University, Washington, D. C., who was principal at that time. Each member gave his or her history for the past ten years, and it was decided that the three who began the course with the class, but who did not graduate, will hereafter be considered members and will be invited to the reunions. Supper was served at 9 o'clock. Red being the class color, the table decorations were all red, poppies being the flowers used, the souvenir menu cards were also red, and the favors were roses. The officers are: President, Dr. Hassett; historian, Rev. G. S. Rollins; secretary, Dr. Watts. The class will meet again in 1899.

MONSON KEEPS THE BANNER.

The Academy Athletic Team Victorious by a Wider Margin Than Ever Before.

The pennant offered five years ago for the team of the Western Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association which should win it the greatest number of times in five years will adorn the walls of Monson Academy in the future, the contest last Saturday resulting in 54 points for Monson, 40 for Holyoke high school, 28 for Amherst high school, 19 for Westfield and 13 for Springfield high school, Monson thus winning for the third time. And the victory is the more remarkable because of the small number of men to choose from and the scarcity of good apparatus and anything like an appropriate place for training. The first year Springfield had everything her own way, and was not closely crowded the next year. But the third time Monson carried the manner off by one point, and the next time by 4, this time having a margain of 14. Did you notice the combination—1-4-14? It might be considered an indication of good results in the future, if the contests are to be continued, as there is some talk of it. Springfield's position was a surprise, as she was expected to make a hard fight for first place.

The weather was fine, and Monson people turned out loyally to support the home team, about 100 going, including the teachers of the academy. Some of the team had gone up the night before, to contest in the preliminary contests of the morning, and the summary shows that Monson scored in every event in which she contested, and that in the mile and half-mile bicycle races alone did she make no attempt to score. Two men had secured places for the half-mile race, but were not satisfied with their position on the course for the final heat and withdrew. The summary of places was:

	Firsts.	Seconds.	Thirds.
Monson,	3	10	9
Holyoke,	5	4	3
Amherst,	5		2
Westfield,	3	1	1
Springfield,	1	2

Several of the Monson team were sick, or the margin would have been still greater. The feature of the meeting was the large number of records broken, no less than 12 going to smash, in which Monson had a part, Chism breaking the running broad jump record, and Christy that of the mile run. The record of 15 2-5 seconds, which W. T Linnehan of Amherst made in the 120-yards hurdles was remarkable, as it is two seconds less than the Amherst college record for that race, 1 1-5 seconds lower that the New England intercollegiate record, and two-fifths of a second below the American intercollegiate record of 15 4-5 seconds.

When the special train reached the station about half the town was there to meet it, for the victory was a town one as well as an academy. The team was placed in coaches and drawn about the streets accompanied by the band, a tooting of horns, the banging of cannons, fireworks, and the ringing of bells. Many of the stores and residences along the line of march were decorated and illuminated. The academy bell fairly grew hoarse under the service it was called upon to perform, for it rang without cessation from the time of the arrival of the train until midnight, when all noise was stopped. With all the enthusiasm there was no act which called for the least censure, and all interested are much picased over the result.

To the strains of the wedding march played by Joseph Chandler, preceeded by the ushers and the tiny bridesmaid and best man,—Miss Louise Gifford and Master George Cushman, nephew of the bride,—the happy couple entered the room and passed to the opposite corner where, standing under an immense horse shoe of laurel, the ceremony was performed. The reports showed that the past year at the Academy had been a prosperous one. In the evening the annual concert of the musical department was given under the direction of Miss Eva F. Pike, with Miss Cushman as soloist. Every number was acceptably rendered, and showed careful preparation. Miss Northey also sang several selections in a very pleasing manner. Wednesday afternoon the class day exercises of the seniors were held on the campus. In the evening the usual address before the alumni was given by Hon. Harvey N. Shephard, '67. At 9 p. m. the art reception was held in Fisk Hall, under the direction of Miss Wyman. Yesterday morning at half-past nine the graduating exercises were held, with the anniversary dinner at one o'clock, and the annual interview in the evening.

WARE.

The street in front of the town hall is being much improved by cutting it down to grade with West street.

Rev. A. M. Osgood will preach next Sunday morning on "Principles Governing Our Choice of Amusements."

Chas. W. Eddy and wife expect to spend their vacation at Truro, Nova Scotia. Mr. Eddy has an engagement to assist in establishing a photo-engraving plant there.

It was supposed that the gypsy moth had made its appearance in town the first of the week, but the creature that was taken for it has proved to be a small white fly, name not known.

The reservoir park is being handsomely graded, and a good drive-way being made around the reservoir. When completed it will be a place the citizens of Ware may justly be proud of.

Several more cases of supposed hydrophobia among cattle have been reported this week, and rumors have been afloat that Miss Mary Howe and Perry Cheever were both suffering from having handled the cattle while they were sick. The selectmen have ordered that all dogs allowed to run at large shall be muzzled from the 19th day of June until September 1st.

There was a very peculiar "runaway" Tuesday night, when it is claimed that a horse with a load of beer ran away from East Brookfield and came to Ware without a driver, being caught near the corner of High and North streets by the police, who took charge of five kegs and a half barrel, and it is supposed that several kegs were taken away without leave of the officers. The outfit was claimed by the proprietor of the East Brookfied hotel, who has a license, and who claimed that he was not transporting the outfit, but that the horse ran away.

The telephone exchange at Ware is an assured success. Already twenty-five instruments have been subscribed for, and it is estimated that this number will be increased by at least fifty per cent by the time the exchange is open for business. There are on the list of subscribers to the exchange doctors, lawyers, florists, dealers in hay, coal, lumber, groceries, fish, beef, drugs and medicines, etc., the Western Union Telegraph Co., the Boston and Maine and the Boston and Albany freight depots, the Ware River News, the Mansion House, and the National and Savings banks. There are besides several private families who will have telephones at their residences. Subscribers to the exchange will have the privilege of sending and receiving telegrams at no extra charge. The company will equip the line of the telegraph company with a metallic circuit and a long-distance transmitter, so that telegrams may be received by telephone exactly as well as in the ordinary manner.

He Shrinks from Washing

So do woolens and flannels, if they're not washed properly. Try the right way. Get a package of Pearline, and do as directed. Your things won't shrink, and they'll be softer, brighter and better, than ever before. That's the beauty of Pearline—washing is not only easier, but better and safer. Things that you would n't dare to trust to the wear of the washboard are washed perfectly with Pearline.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE. Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 333 JAMES PYLE, New York.

A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 150 to 127. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recomendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

quiet as she called Miss Fenton aside and untied an old stocking.

"I want to repay you for—everything."

"No, child, I can never repay you, Kit."

Kit gazed at her with a look of dazed inquiry; then went on harnessing the old raw-boned horse and hitched him to the wagon.

"It will be lighter drivin' home," Mrs. Jones observed, as she tucked the last blanket aroung the frying pan.

Mary Fenton never forgot the look of mute agony that crept into Kit's big sort eyes as she looked at her mother. Then she pulled her hat further down over her face with the same old gesture, as she clambered into the high seat of the wagon and took the reins, while her mother got up beside her.

"You will have a long, hot drive," Miss Fenton said stupidly.

"Oh, we'll stop with folks over night and it will be real pleasant," Mrs. Jones answered, tying her sunbonnet strings.

Mary Fenton climbed up on the wagon wheel and kissed Kit warmly and whispered, "I'll take some Shasta lilies to his grave. I will remember."

Then a cracking of the long willow switch that served for a whip, the old horse started up and they were gone.

Mary Fenton watched the bobbing of the short reddish curls amid the clouds of dust until a turn in the road hid them; then she sat down under a pine, covered her face with her hands and cried.

She sat there for some time. At last she heard a footstep cracking the dried pine needles and looked up.

"Dick!" she exclaimed, with a start, and began, womanlike, smoothing the ruffled hair on her forehead.

"I thought you were never going to write, so I came to you." He held out his hand to her. "I came on the morning train, missed you at the tavern and was told that you were over in this direction, helping some proteges of yours. Crying! little woman!" He caught sight of her tear-stained face, then taking it between both his hands he said tenderly: "Now, Mary, tell me, have you decided?"

The answer came very faintly. "Yes, Dick." Then half to herself she repeated Kit's homely words: "If folks have got each other in this world, they've got all that's wanted. Oh, Dick," she continued, with the new enthusiasm shining in her eyes, enthusiasm that she had always voted bad form—"the noblest soul I ever saw has gone from me to-day."

Mary Fenton's life was blessed by Kit's unconscious hand, and poor little Kit, far away on her Oregon land, toiled loyally, looking up at night at Shasta's white peak, and praying that soon she might fold her hands and that she and Bill could be happy together, somewhere above the great white mountain.—Overland Magazine.

HIS AWFUL THREAT.

"Gentlemen," said a smooth looking man to the crowd in the cigar store, "I saw a funny thing to-day."

"What was it?" asked three of the crowd at the same time.

The smooth looking man leaned against a showcase and began: "I was going down the street this afternoon, and as I was passing the postoffice I heard quite a racket inside. I went in. There was one of the big Irish women who scrub out dancing around in the middle of the lobby with a pair of boxing gloves on her hands. She was hitting out in all directions and had already floored a couple of men. An alarm was sent in, and pretty soon a policeman came running down and arrested her. Just as he was about to haul her out to the patrol box that stands on the corner near by a dignified looking man stepped out of the crowd and said, 'Let that woman go.' 'Why should I let her go?' asked the policeman. 'Because the United States government says that she can do what she has been doing.' 'I don't catch on,' replied the policeman. 'Then read that!' shouted the dignified looking man, pointing to the sign on the wall. The policeman turned and read a sign, 'Letter Box.'"

The smooth looking man stopped here and looked around expectantly. No one laughed.

After a depressing silence for a couple of minutes one of the party said, "Well, what's the joke?"

"Why," said the smooth looking man, "Letter box—let her box, see?—Let—her—box, meaning the woman who had on the boxing gloves."

There was a succession of dismal groans, and every one save the clerk walked out into the night. After all had gone the smooth looking man turned to the clerk and said hurriedly: "Say, boss, I didn't mean anything by that. I only wanted a chance to talk with you in private."

"What do you want?" asked the clerk.

The smooth looking man approached him said hoarsely, "I only want a quarter."

"Well, you don't get it."

The smooth looking man's face took on a hard expression. "Then I will tell you another story," he said firmly.

"Not on your life, you won't!" shouted the clerk, producing the desired coin.

SOLICITUDE.

What it is to be a genuine single minded egotist is illustrated in a recent French volume by a story of Mme. du Deffant, a celebrity of the last century. Mme. du Deffant was a great invalid and spent most of her time in bed, but this fact did not prevent her from receiving a great deal of company.

One day when she was thus in bed several guests arrived and were admitted. They all began to shiver and pull their cloaks around them.

"What," exclaimed the invalid, "is it cold here?"

"It is simply freezing," answered a guest.

"Thank you for telling me," said Mme. du Deffant.

She rang a bell. The guests supposed she was sending for a maid to build a fire, but when the servant came in Mme. du Deffant said:

"Amelie, bring me in my down coverlet."

Having given this order, she began a conversation about other matters.—Youth's Companion.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with la grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial of LeGro & Lynde, Palmer; G. L. Keeney, Monson; F. A. Spencer, Ware.

Plumpness vs. Emaciation.

WHAT MAKES THE DIFFERENCE?

It is a question of Food and its Digestion.

Many people think we must eat fats and oils to become fleshy. This is a serious mistake. We should eat starch foods. If we cannot digest well-cooked starch foods use Pre Digested Starch Food. PASKOLA. Paskola will not only be absorbed at once by the most delicate stomach, but it will create an appetite for other food. An increase in flesh and strength will follow its use.

Mr. C. H. Butler, a druggist of Oswego, N. Y., says: "A young lady just in reports a gain of five pounds after the use of two small bottles of 'Paskola.'"

Send for pamphlet and for particulars to The Pre-Digested Food Co., 20 Reade St., New York. O. P. ALLEN, Palmer, Mass.

THIRTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE.

MILLER'S FALLS, MASS.—"At different times during the past thirteen years," said Mr. W. A. Johnson of this place, "my wife has been sick from lung trouble, kidney and liver complaint, ulceration of the stomach and spring debility. At each time she has taken Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and it cured her. It is a family medicine with us and many of our neighbors.

INTRODUCING

A. A. Shepherd and Dr. Scott.

THE GREAT NEW YORK SPECIALIST —THE DOCTOR PREVAILED UPON TO HAVE HIS GREAT REMEDY PLACED IN THE HANDS OF THE DRUGGISTS.

This is the most wonderful production of medical science in the nineteenth century. This is not a patent medicine, but a prescription compounded on scientific principles and used by Dr. Scott in his extensive practice for the cure of all blood diseases. The cures wrought by it are simply wonderful, and attracted thousands to the doctor's parlors for treatment.

To such an extent is the demand upon the time and attention of the doctor for this medicine from people who could not visit New York city that it became a matter of duty to devise some plan by which the general public could be supplied with this genuine valuable remedy, and for this purpose A. A. Shepherd has been called to arrange with LeGro & Lynde of Palmer, to permit them to keep in stock and sell this wonderful blood remedy. This is purely vegetable, an excellent tonic and builder, a blood purifier unexcelled, a nerve tonic nothing can equal. Dr. Scott has devoted his life to the thorough knowledge and understanding of blood diseases.

A few of which are named here: Kidney disease, liver complaint, sick headache, muscular rheumatism, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, constipation, scrofula, syphilis, cancerous humors, pain in bones, catarrh, salt rheum, pimples on face, general debility, boils, dizziness, female weakness, malarial poison.

The above named druggists have received their first consignment, and wouldi nvite all persons to call and become acquainted with the merits of a perfect remedy. Dr. Scott's medicine, when placed in drug stores is sold under the name of Dr. Scott's Sarsaparilla, and all who intend taking a spring medicine should not fail to try Dr. Scott's Sarsaparilla. No pills have to be used with Dr. Scott's.

The Old School Books.

What pleasant memories cluster round these volumes old and worn,
With covers smirched, and binding creased, and pages thumbed and torn!
These are the books we used to con, I and poor
brother Will,
When we were boys together in the schoolhouse
on the hill,
Well I recall the nights at home, when side by side we sat
Before the fire, and o'er these books indulged in whispered chat,
And how, when father chided us for idling time away,
Our eyes bent to the task as though they'd never been astray.
The old-time proverbs scribbled here, the caution to beware,
("Steal not this book, my honest friend,")
scrawled roughly here and there;
The blurs, the blots, the luncheon spots, the numberless dog's ears,
The faded names, the pictures, and, alas! the strains of tears,
All take me back in mind to days when cloudless was the sky,
When grief was so short-lived I smiled before my tears were dry;
When, next to father's angry frown, I feared the awful nod
That doomed me, trembling, to advance and humbly kiss the rod.
How bright those days! Our little cares, our momentary fears,
And e'en our pains, vanished with a burst of sobs
and tears,
And every joy seemed great enough to balance
all our woe;
What pity that when griefs are real, they can't be balanced so!
The schoolhouse stands in ruins now, the boys have scattered wide;
A few are old and gray like me, but nearly all have died;
And brother Will is one of these; his curly head was laid Down by the brook at father's side, beneath the willow's shade.
These books, so quaint and queer to you, to me
are living things:
Each tells a story of the past, and each a message brings;
Whene'er I sit at eventide, and turn their pages
o'er,
They seem to speak in tones that thrilled my heart in days of yore.
The schoolboy of to-day would laugh, and throw these old books by;
But, think you, neighbor, could his heart consent
if he were I?

RESCUED.

The weather had been dark and gloomy in the little village by the sea; not often or copiously had it rained, but great masses of blackest cloud rolled along the coast from headland to headland, often so near to the ocean that only the experienced eyes of the older fishermen saw where lay the dividing line between the dusky shades of the higher rocks and the low, sombre masses that were driving in before the rising storm.

"It will come in with the tide," exclaimed John Brightman, as he hauled his dory high on the sandy beach.

"What will come in with the tide?" asked Anderson the boat-builder, and he rested one side on the stranded dory; then shielding his sight by his open hand, he looked under the shadow of its palm earnestly seaward.

"The storm, David, the storm; don't you hear it coming in on the tide?"

And the roar of the distant surf—for the cove between the Black Eagle and the Whale Rocks was smooth with fine, hard sand—the roar of the sea on the rocks sounded in the ears like the thunder of the artillery of an opening battle.

"That's only the breakers under the Eagle's Wings."

"The sea will cross the Fox Tracks today."

"Hear that! A comber has burst on the Whale's Back."

These expressions from three of the fishermen, who were bowed nearly to earth, dragging the heavy net to the upland. The Whale Rock made one headland, and the Black Eagle the other point of the little bay; between them came the fishing boats from daily toil, and by the ledge of short, sharp rocks, called the Fox Tracks, one could ordinarily walk at half tide to the very beak of the Black Eagle. But it was rare, indeed, that any of the men tempted the denizens of the sea from thence; the boys and girls of the village took their first lessons with the hook and line from that spot, and those of the neighborhood oft went there, in fine weather, fishing. It was nearly two miles over the sand and rock from the head of the beach along the Fox Tracks to the Eagle's Wings, as the projecting sides of the lofty, black rock were called.

The fisherman's wife in the low cottage on the upland also heard the onward march of the coming storm.

"Did you ever hear the pines moan so loudly? Listen now! Only hear the sighing between our house and Anderson's!" Thus she addressed John Brightman, as he hung his oil-skin clothing in the lean-to shed at the rear of the kitchen.

"That isn't the pine-woods, woman, that's the tide," responded the husband in his superiority.

As he spoke, coming past the corner of the little garden, swiftly moving over the soft carpet of pine-needles, appeared the form of Mrs. Anderson.

"Have the children come?" she asked, with just the slightest shade of trouble in her tones.

"The children! what!" exclaimed Mrs. Hannah. "I never gave them a thought since; where did they go?"

"To the Black Eagle, fishing."

"To the Black Eagle, such an afternoon, on a rising tide!" interrupted John Brightman, advancing from his seat.

"There comes Rudolf now, up from the sands," rejoined Mrs. Brightman; "Hannah cannot be far off."

"The boy walks heavily, I'll go and meet him."

The two women stood at the low stoop of the cabin door, watching John Brightman as he strode down the lane and picked up a lad of perhaps a dozen years of age, whom he brought to the house and placed before the kitchen fire.

"He is as wet as a fish, and he tells an awful story," he added, as soon as he recovered his breath. "He was washed ashore from the Black Eagle, the tide has crossed the Fox Tracks and Hannah is on the Eagle's Back."

From a child Mrs. Anderson had been brought up to hear of the sailor lost at sea, or of the crew of the fishing smack summoned to a common death by the chance collision, but this—

The bravery of the youthful hero who had swam ashore to give the alarm was all forgotten, and the woman sank into a chair with the one exclamation:

"Oh, God! my child! my child!"

"She told me to swim for the shore when the wave took me off. I came just as fast as I could, and the sea helped me on besides," protested the little bare-headed, bare-footed fellow, as though he must excuse his ungallant desertion of Mrs. Anderson's daughter.

"Pass the word along among the neighbors and I'll go to the lifeboat station," said John Brightman in low, decided tones, and he was out of sight ere the two women were ready to give the alarm. There were yet four hours of daylight, and strong arms would make the distance short from the northern shore, where lay the lifeboat, to the beak of the Black Eagle. Such was the name of the projecting precipice at the end of the high, overhanging rock.

Andy Read, the nearest member of the life crew, was soon overtaken, and, at the news, he joined his fellow in search of the remaining four.

"Ay!" exclaimed Andy, as they ran, "would that it were anything but a southeaster, for pull as we may, the ugly sea strikes the boat three points from the bow."

"It will be a long, hard pull," said John Brightman, "but it's three hours to sunset yet, thank God!"

The lifeboat station was to the northward, half way between Rocton and the next town, far up toward the land that led out to the Whale Rock. The woman had, therefore, gone in an opposite direction, and from house to house had passed along the appalling news.

"Hannah Anderson is on the Black Eagle! The sea is breaking over the wings and has crossed the Fox Tracks!"

"And the tide is still coming in! Oh, what a tide!" The last response was, superfluous, for the crowd were nearly to the shop of the boat-builder, and across the ledges, which at low tide united the tall rock to the land, the sea thundered and broke in foaming surf that looked like masses of unbaled cotton tossed here and there.

"You, at work on your old whaleboat, when your only daughter is, like as not, now washed out to sea!" tauntingly cried one of the women, as honest David Anderson looked up from some finishing touches he was giving to the repairs of a boat in his yard.

"No! she is not carried off yet," exclaimed Clinton Abbott, who from a pile of spars had gained a covered way and swept the horizon with a field glass.

All the villagers respected and loved Clinton; from his father's ship-building yards near by he had often come among them, as a friendly visitor, patiently listening to the simple story of their sorrows; as a small capitalist liberally aiding them in their little ventures; and, later in life, when travel had matured his character and affliction had silvered his hair, he had not forgotten the peaceful hamlet he had so dearly loved in his younger days.

"I can see a woman's dress blowing out, clear and plain, on the very summit of the Eagle's Back."

"Hurrah! hurrah!" shouted the crowd. "O that the lifeboat were on this side the Fox Tracks!"

"Take the whale-boat, here she is!" joined in David Anderson, in a low, hoarse voice, at the same moment running out a pair of wheels, on which she was tossed as if she had been a feather, by the too ready hands.

"Did ye see, was the life-boat cleared away yet?" added David, in his rich Scotch brogue, addressing Clinton.

"I could see a small crowd at their house on the beach," replied Clinton.

"But we'll not wait for them," continued David.

"Run the whaleboat well up the sands, boys," rejoined Clinton for reply. "Now to be under the Eagle's Beak before the other crew can get half way there!"

The mind of the people, whether in the masses of Europe or on the beach of the fishing village, recognizes intellect, and from thence chooses its leader. Seven strong, oaken oars were in the boat—one more than needed to guard against accident—and two dozen sturdy arms, with Clinton's hand on the prow to guide the way, soon had the boat on the edge of the sea.

"The farther up the sands, the more to windward for the pull, yet, stay, steady boys! now, for the launch; whoever is going make ready! You, David—"

"Yes, Sir!" interrupted David Anderson, giving a tighter roll to his sleeves, around his muscular arm. It's the stroke oar for me this time."

"The stroke to Anderson! Ryan, take the bow! Choose your places, the rest!" exclaimed Clinton Abbott, and the boat was shoved far into deep water by another half-dozen men, who kept alongside until the sea stood up to their waists, and the rising surf broke at their shoulders.

With Clinton's steady hand at the tiller, the whaleboat headed well up to the windward when she left the beach, for to fall to leeward then on her way out to the Black Eagle would be to find herself pounded into splinters on the sharp rocky edges of the Fox Tracks.

"Will the lifeboat crew be there before us, my boys?" demanded Clinton Abbott.

"Not if I can help it, sir," replied David Anderson, as with a Scotchman's firmness and his own sturdy muscle he gave to his fellows the long, deep stroke that went beneath the frothing sea.

"The life-boat men are out!" shouted Tom Ryan from the bow. "See her through that smooth spot in the Tracks yonder," he cried, motioning with his head to where the deeper water for a short space allowed an unbroken view through the range of rocky points to leeward.

Yes, there was the life-boat, manned by six of the best rowers on the coast, coming up to windward, but the strain was terrible on muscle and on boat; the distance was shorter, but the wind and sea were such that at times the life-boat seemed to be standing on end, with the bow high in air; then she fell back helplessly into the trough of the sea and was lost to sight. The rain had not yet come, but the gale was upon them in all its fury, and there would seem to be no limit to the height of the fast rising tide.

"The Eagle's Wings are nearly awash! A few lengths more, and we can let her go to the leeward; I can plainly see the girl now," said Clinton Abbott, spurring on his men.

Perhaps John Bridgman, who commanded the life-boat men also saw the sea had nearly overflowed the rock, for the boat had taken the wave-crests more abeam, and was making more headway, even although it were out to the open sea.

"When the life crew change their course again," said Tom Ryan from the bow' they will have an easier but a longer pull for the Eagle's Beak."

But the whaleboat had gained her offing and was now coming down wind like a sea gull, with a powerful yet easy stroke from her six oars, with great seas astern heaving her a boat's length ahead every time she rose on the wave crests.

"The life-boat has headed inshore again boys, and taken the wind and sea aport," said Clinton to his men.

"Ay, sir! But she can never reach the Beak before us now!" almost savagely retorted David Anderson as he straightened himself out to his oar with a force that, followed by the rest, shot the whaleboat to where the bow oarsman could have tossed a biscuit on the Beak.

And all this time the men ran hither and thither on the beach; not an inhabitant remained in any one of the houses; the children cried, they knew not why, and the women knelt, not caring which won in the contest, but joining with heart and soul the agonizing prayer of one of their number:

"Oh! God! My child! My child! May the boat crews reach the Black Eagle ere it be too late!"

So far as arrival there, that prayer was already answered, for the whaleboat crew was off the point backing water with their oars, to keep from being dashed to pieces on the outlying rocks. To what purpose had been the race? The tide had risen to such a height that rocky points which at half tide could have been seen and avoided now awaited treacherously just below the surface, ready to pound their sharp heads through the planking of the boat. The life-boat, now not very far distant, must fare worse, for a very slight touch of these flinty edges would cut her metal and leave her more helpless than a log, battering against the ledges of granite.

Had both boats come to the rescue only to see the sea sweep the Black Eagle clear of the girl, whose long hair and flowing robe streamed far out in the wrathful gale, like the signals of distress from a stranded ship?

"There is but one way," cried Clinton Abbott, "and not a second to be lost. Pull up to the windward again and meet me on the other side of the Eagle's inner wing."

As he spoke he plunged into the water and was borne along swiftly under the Beak. Men accustomed to the sea think and act quickly, and the crew caught the spirit of the plan. The strong swimmer would seize the girl in his arms and the two would be borne by the force of the current around the rocks, through the whirl of the black waters into the bay beyond. The boat must pull around the outlying dangers and meet them there.

There was just one circuitous passage of smooth, deep water, shaped like the letter "S," that led right under the Eagle's Beak, and with the wind at the southeast, the waters entered just where the whaleboat was lying with backing oars, and passed out of the swirl of a millrace to the bay wherein the life-boat was coming up manfully with the wind and sea on her beam, heading for the inner wing of the Eagle.

As the swimmer swept along this current the Scotch brogue of David Anderson resounded loud above the thunder of the surf.

"Drop! Hannah! Drop child, this instant, I tell ye!" shouted the father, as with the same breath he gave the order to pull away from his daughter and from the struggling man, but just now their captain.

"Ay! drop girl, drop, and for your life don't touch me, but let me grasp you," echoed the voice of Clinton as he looked upward from the dark water to the great mass of rock that overhung his head.

And the surf rolling in on the opposite side of the Black Eagle gave one boom and a swash that had well nigh surged over the whole surface of the rock. But its prey had escaped. Clasped in the strong arm of Clinton Abbott, Hannah Anderson was borne swiftly through the curve that marked the deepest water, past projecting rocks sharpened at their points by the surge of ages, into—was it safety beyond?

There was no swimming to be done; the wind and the tide bore the couple resistlessly onward; it needed Clinton's right arm to do the steering, while with his left he pressed close to him the form of the maiden.

But the whaleboat had not yet rounded the breakers, for to them safety lay in a good offing, and this must be by a pull dead to the windward. Must the floating couple meantime be swept too far onward, until, perhaps, caught in the undertow, they would be carried on to the ledges of the Fox Tracks?

No! no! Rest quietly on your oars, gallant fishermen! If there is one among you that bears in his heart a deathless love for the boat builder's daughter, the grim enemy shall not at this moment snatch her from you. Let the storm now come, driving the two boats before it, madly on to the sandy shore, where the women still weep and pray! May the tide rise to its highest; the safer will be the landing!

For, exactly as Clinton Abbott, bearing the supple form of the girl, reaches the end of the passage through which the merciless waters have resistlessly driven them, six of the best surfmen on the coast bend to their strong oars, and the life-boat men shoot the prow of their ably managed craft just past the struggling pair. With the muscular arm of the stroke carsman and his companion the girl and her preserver are drawn aboard, while the four other boatmen keep the boat bow to the sea. Then from both crews goes up to heaven, drowning the roar of the surf and the howl of the storm, a long, deep-chested, enthusiastic Hurrah! Hurrah!

And the boat race continues, with undiminished ardor for the shore, but it is now only to see which shall soonest turn the prayer of a mother's heart into thanksgiving. Driven before the furious gale, borne on by the still swelling tide, the long strokes are scarcely needed, and both parties to the contest must at the same moment reach the welcome goal.

And the parents fall into each other's arms, with the child between them, joining in the glad exclamation:

"Thank God, who saved her this day from the Black Eagle."

And, as the village pastor blessed the reunited family, we may permit him to note the lesson:

"At the moment of her uttermost need, thus may maidenly purity ever be saved from the threatening ills of life's tempestuous seas, by the ready, chivalrous arm of manly strength." —Capt. Julius Palmer, Jr., in Boston Journal.

WOMAN AND HER PURSE.

Every few days the newspapers contain account of how some woman's purse has been snatched from her hand, the thief generally managing to escape capture. These daylight street robberies are not generally productive of much profit; otherwise they would doubtless be of much more frequent occurrence, for as a general thing the victim is so "rattled" as to be prevented from calling for assistance until the theif is beyond successful pursuit. The problem as to what a lady shall do with her purse has never yet been solved, and so, while waiting for the solution, as she has been waiting many hundreds of years, she is still holding the purse in her hand. It must be a tiresome thing, and the practice is certainly a bad one, for while a purse is not always as fat as it looks with a few samples of dress goods, some postage stamps, a nickle or two for car fare and the latchkey, it pretty generally looks fat enough in the eyes of a thief, to whom anything of that kind is tempting when held almost in his face. Men do a great many things that women lack the nerve to do, but carrying a purse in the hand on the streets is one of the things that no man would have the nerve to undertake. But what shall a lady do with her purse? It is said that pockets are no longer made in ladies' dresses which, if so, is a most unfortunate circumstance, for nothing is ever so safe any where as in the pocket of a lady's dress. Nobody could ever find anything there, because we believe it is a matter of record that no one has ever yet succeeded in even finding the pocket. But if it is not now the fashion to have pockets in dresses that disposition of the purse is out of the question, and the problem is unsolved. The next woman suffrage convention ought to take this matter up as one which directly concerns the rights of women. It might propose a reward for the suggestion of some method of carrying a purse that would be both safe and convenient—some way that will not prove a temptation to the thief and facilitate the commission of robberies on the streets in daylight.—Philadelphia Press.

Often I Wish.

Often I wish that I might be
In this divinest weather,
Among my father's fields—ah me!
And he and I together.

Below the mountains, fair and dim,
My father's fields are singing;
I'd rather tread the sward with him
Then dance at any wedding.

O, well your skylark cleaves the blue
To bid the sun good morrow!
He's not the bonny song I knew
Above an Irish furrow.

O, green and fresh your English sod,
With daisies sprinkled over;
But greener far were the fields I trod
That foamed with Irish clover.

And often, often, I'm longing still,
In this all-golden weather,
For my father's face by an Irish hill,
And he and I together!

WHAT SAVED HIM.

One Christmas morning, many years ago, a young reporter on a daily paper had occasion to call with a message at the office of one of the foremost editors and publishers of the country.

The younger man was a sickly, country lad of keen sensibility and nervous temperament, who, finding himself homeless and friendless in a great city, had yielded to temptation and had fallen into the habit of drinking and gambling. The publisher, as he listened to the message noticed the lines which dissipation had already left on the boy's face.

He was a man who made it his work in the world to help others. No man touched his hand in passing who did not gain from him new courage and hope in life.

He answered the message, which the reporter brought, and then holding out his hand cordially said, "Let me wish you a Merry Christmas, my lad." He took from the shelf a book containing sketches of the lives of the greatest English, French and German authors, with extracts from their words.

"Here," said he, "are some friends for the new year. When you spend an hour with them you will have noble company."

The surprise of the gift and the unexpected kindness from the man whom he regarded with awe had a powerful effect upon the lad. He spent all his leisure time in poring over the book. It kindled his latent scholarly tastes. He saved his money to buy complete works first of this author, and then of that; he worked harder to earn more money to buy them. After a few years he began to gather together and study rare and curious books, and to write short papers upon obscure literary subjects.

Men of simular tastes sought him out; he numbered some of the foremost scholars and thinkers of the country among his friends, but he never forgot the lonely friendless lad who had been sinking into a gambler and a drunkard until a kind hand drew him back, and he in his turn sought out lonely, friendless boys in the great city, and gave them a helping hand out of the gulf.

So year by year his life widened and deepened into a strong current from which many drew comfort and help.

He died a few years ago. The sale of his library gathered all the collectors of rare books in the sea-board cities. During his illness the newspapers spoke of him with a sudden appreciation of the worth which had so long been hid in obscurity.

"A profound scholar with the heart of a child;" "A journalist who never wrote a word to subserve a base end," they said. He read those eulogies with a quiet smile.

One day he put into the hands of a friend an old dingy volume. "When I am gone," he said, "take this to Mr.——, and tell him that whatever of the good or usefulness there has been in my life I owe to him and this Christmas gift of his thirty years ago."

The little story is absolutely true. We venture to tell it because there is no one living whom it can hurt, while there are many whom it may help to hold out friendly hands to their brothers who have stumbled into darker paths in life.—The Advance.

EIFFEL'S TOWER OVERTOPPED.

At Wembley park, which is about six miles from the heat of London, there is in the course of erection at the present time a tower, the total hight of which will be 1150 feet—175 feet higher than the Eiffel tower. Unlike the latter tower, which gazes down on the houses and roofs of the crowded city, the Wembley tower crowns an eminence of the beautiful Wembley park, affording a lovely view of the surrounding country.

It will be a strange sight to look on the birds flying in the trees so far beneath one, for at the foot of the tower is a famous rookery, where the rooks gather and chatter from morning till night, and also one of the old, ivy-covered English cottages which has stood there for over a hundred years. A few years ago the building of such towers as these would have been impossible. It is only with the new methods of handling steel and iron girders that such structures can be successfully put up. Over 150 men are now employed fitting pieces of the tower together, and it is wonderful what rapid progress they make.

The foundations which have to support such tremendous weight above them have to be laid in place and kept there for a long time to allow for the settling of the earth. There are four legs at the base, and each leg is composed of four small legs, or better, feet. These rest on tremendous foundations that were placed in position over two years ago. These foundations are made of stone and concrete, upon which are fastened iron plates, to which the legs are attached.

The material of which the tower proper is composed is called "mild steel." There is not such a network of intricate little girders which we see in the Eiffel tower; the spaces are more open, and the tower appears to be narrower and lighter in the air. The "lifts," as they call them in England, or the elevators as we call them here, which are to carry the people to the top of the observatory, are four in number. Two of them go up to the first platform only, which is at a hight of 150 feet from the ground, and two will go up to 900 feet, where there is to be an upper landing. Above this there will be several smaller landings, to be reached by stairs only.

Five-year-old Flossie had been battling with her mother all day. "There, child," said the latter on putting the child to bed, "sleep well, and don't be so cross when you wake up." "I notice," retorted little Flossie, "when it's me you say 'cross'; when it's you you say 'nervous.'"—Pearson's Weekly.

"But, my dear sir, said the man who procrastinates, "If I pay you this money, I will have to borrow it of some one else." "Very well," replied the cold-blooded citizen, "so long as you pay what you owe me, I don't object to you owing what you pay me."—Industries.

PALMER NEWS.

HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT.

The Class Day Ceremonies, Graduating Exercises, and Senior Reception.

The class day exercises of the class of '94 of the Palmer high school were held at Oak Knoll Wednesday afternoon at half past two. A large number of the graduates of the school and friends and relatives of the class were present, and the exercises were much enjoyed by all. The platform on which the class sat was prettily decorated with pond lilies and daisies, representing the class colors, gold and white, and in the center was a shield with '94 upon it. The address of welcome was given by the president, Miss Mabel Ryther, and the class history by Maurice Kelliher. The statistics were read by Brigham Ball, quotations by Miss Flora Studley, prophecy by Miss Bessie Royce, and the class will by Harold Shaw. Then followed the class poem by Agnes McFarlane, and the exercises closed with the class yell.

The graduating exercises took place in Memorial Hall at 2.30 yesterday afternoon. The back of the platform was draped with the national colors, while the front was trimmed with asparagus and white daisies, the desk in the center being banked with ferns and pond lilies. Overhead at the front of the proscenium arch was hung the class motto, "Te digna sequere," made with white daisies on a background of ferns. The graduating class occupied seats on the stage, with the teachers of the school, Superintendent Small, Chairman Breckenridge of the school committee, and Charles Jacobus of Springfield, for the past four years principal of the high school there, who was to give the address. A large number of the friends of the school were present, the families of the graduates having seats reserved for them near the platform. The exercises of the afternoon were opened with a piano duett by Mrs. H. M. Auger and Miss O. W. Parent, after which Miss R. Grace Huntley of Hartford sang "He Roamed Through the Forest." Superintendent Small then introduced Mr. Jacobus, who was to speak on "Heroes and Heroism." The speaker said:

There is in the human soul an involuntary admiration of heroism. Ideas of heroism differ, however, and there are false standards, as is often shown. Objects of ambition are as varied almost as individuals. In what does true greatness of man consist? Not in wealth, or station, or intellectural capacity, but in the consciousness of an honest purpose in life. This may be possessed by the peasant as well as the king, and he who will may secure it; all may be heroes. We are too apt to forget the trifles which go to make up the sum of human happiness; small acts are considered insignificant and often overlooked, but each aids to build up the character, and these small acts from the cradle to the grave shine out through a noble and heroic character. There are many unknown heroes, and there is scarcely any phase of life which has not its heroes and heroism,—among the wealthy, in the exercise of benevolence, at the bar and on the bench, among the secular press and through ordinary lives;—and in these days it is glorious to find one true to his trust. The essential feature is unremitting toil; genius and wealth are nothing, toil is everything, and each must do the work for himself.

There are four kinds of heroes. The soldier hero, who when troops were needed came from every point, not from mercenary motives, but for the salvation of the country, and a nation now rejoices over the results of their heroism. Sacred through all ages have been the names of those who died for their country, but it is not necessary to give up life to be heroic, and private as well as officer shared in the glory. The moral and the Christian hero takes no low place among the list of heroes. The Christian hero is indispensable to the establishment of an enlightened nation. Then there is heroism born of honest toil, the labor heroes, and in their round of honest toil lies a heroic creation. The scholar makes the last of the quartette, and all the others are more or less dependent on this. The heroism of the scholar is necessary to give right direction to the others. The intellectual hero is not a mere cipher in society. True greatness is inseparable from true goodness. Aside from heroism in action there is heroism in sentiment. We want more heroism, more sacrifice. Cowardice is a decay of manhood; heroes may become saints, but cowards never. The age wants heroes who shall struggle in the cause of right, the world wants heroes to aid it in its onward march; Heaven wants heroes to spread enlightenment into regions still in darkness.

After a piano solo by Mrs. Auger and a vocal selection by Miss Huntley the diplomas were presented by Mr. Breckenridge, chairman of the school committee, in a few well-chosen remarks, and the audience rose while the class sang four verses of the class song, written by Agnes McFarlane:

Four happy years have glided by,
To return—ah, nevermore,
And we think with regret of the days that are past,
Bright days of Ninety-four.

We think of the joys we together have shared,
Of the pleasures that are no more;
With a tear and a sigh we bid good-bye
To the days of Ninety-four.

The sky above us is so blue,
The grass so green beneath,
The roses are blooming so sweet around,
Which June alone can bequeath,

That the heart must needs be filled with joy,
Though a sadness o'er us falls
When we think that in the days to come
We no more shall seek these halls.

Not always have the roses sweet
Been strewn along our way,
But faces cheerful and hearts content
Make bright e'en the darkest day.

Sometimes in the future far away,
When our hearts and our steps are less light,
We may think of the good old times, long past,
When the world to us looked so bright.

Let us boldly into the future look,
Speed onward with eager feet
To fulfill the noblest mission on earth,
And make our lives complete.

And when our work on earth is done,
Our struggles are all o'er,
May we meet at last, an unbroken band,
The class of Ninety-four.

The graduating class gave a reception to invited friends in Memorial Hall in the evening. About 500 invitations had been sent out, and a large number were present, including many of the former graduates. The Palmer Orchestra furnished music, dancing was indulged in, and lemonade served to all. Old acquaintances were renewed, and all seemed to thoroughly enjoy the occasion.

Rev. Mr. Frost's Ex-Parte Council.

The ex-parte council called by Rev. S. T. Frost of Palmer to consider the recent action of the Palmer Baptist church toward him, met in the State Street Baptist church at Springfield Monday forenoon. The churches had been asked to send the pastor and two delegates, and 49 were present from 16 churches. The council organized with Dr. A. W. Wilcox of Holyoke as chairman, and Rev. S. E. Frohock of Springfield as clerk. After the report of the committee which came to Palmer a short time ago to investigate the matter had been heard, Mr. Frost stated his side of the case. The council then went into executive session and the matter was thoroughly discussed, the argument being somewhat heated at times. Finally a committee consisting of Rev. D. B. Hahn of Springfield, Rev. A. R. Diltz and A. F. Pease of Northampton, Rev. R. B. Esten of Westfield and Rev. G. W. Quick of Springfield was appointed to draw up resolutions, and reported the following, which was unanimously adopted:

The committee recommends that after the statements and examination of Rev. S. T. Frost and the report of a committee appointed by the ministers' conference of the Westfield Baptist Association and certain laymen of the said association for the purpose of reconciliation between Rev. Mr. Frost and the Second Baptist church of Palmer.

Resolved, that it is the judgment of this council that the Second Baptist church of Palmer erred when they reconsidered their action by which they granted a letter of dismission to Rev. S. T. Frost and then excluded him from their fellowship, and that therefore the Rev. S. T. Frost is entitled to a letter of dismission according to the original action of the church.

This seems to leave the matter about where it was before, the resolution simply expressing the opinion of the council, without any recommendation to either party. It is reported that Mr. Frost will now demand a letter from the church, though the latter, it is understood, is not inclined to admit the correctness of the council's judgment.

The Bicycle Races Next Wednesday.

The arrangements for the bicycle races on the driving park next Wednesday, the Glorious Fourth, are completed, and everything points to an interesting afternoon's sport. Already there are entries from Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee, Ware, Warren, Monson, Wilbraham, Ludlow and Palmer, and some fast riding may be looked for. The track has been put in excellent shape, and local riders are training there every evening. As the entries do not close till to-morrow, it is impossible to give a list. A social time and general shaking of hands followed.

A Section Hand Killed.

William Turner, one of Strickland's gang from North Wilbraham, was struck and instantly killed by the 1.17 p. m. express from Boston last Saturday in the yard near the freight house. The gang had been warned of the approach of the train, but Turner continued at his work. He was shouted to again, but continued at work beside the track, though as men frequently linger to do something which is near at hand it was thought that he had heard and would step out of the way. The foreman turned his head to see about other matters and heard a shout; looking around he saw that it was too late to do anything to save him. The top part of his head was cut off, and death was instantaneous. He lived at North Wilbraham and leaves a widow. No reason can be assigned for his not heeding the warning and failing to get out of the way.

The matter of stealing bouquets from the cemetery has been mentioned in these columns before, with a warning to the thieves, but last Sunday three handsome bouquets were stolen before they had been left an hour. These is a special statue for such cases, and the penalty is severe. The persons interested are not inclined to allow these depredations to go without some action, and if the guilty parties are caught prosecution will surely follow.

The concreters have been in town this week, putting in the walks about the grammar school building on the corner of School and Park streets. Walks have been put in the whole length of the lot on both School and Park streets, from all the entrances to the streets, to the closets, and a walk about the building close to the foundations. Macdonald on Converse avenue; also a crosswalk on Pleasant street in front of the residence of William Merriam.

While no special attempt will be made to draw a crowd at Forest Lake Gardens on the Fourth, the management will make ample arrangements to accommodate all who visit the grounds, and the fact that nothing will be done to draw the crowds will no doubt attract many who wish a quiet place to take the children for the day. Good music will be provided for those who wish to dance, and there will be the usual opportunities for boating, bowling, etc. One of the attractions will be a good dinner at the restaurant, and ice cream, cold temperance drinks, etc., can be had at the restaurant at any time during the day and evening. Excursion tickets can be secured on all railroads.

Rev. Pleasant Hunter of Minneapolis, Minn., formerly pastor of the Congregational church here, had the degree of D. D. conferred upon him by Princeton University last week. As Princeton never confers but two of these degrees at any one commencement there is all the more honor for the recipient. The other this year went to Rev. Joseph Potter of Persia. The action was a complete surprise for Mr. Hunter, whose first knowledge of the matter was gained from a Princeton graduate at Minneapolis, who had received a telegram announcing the fact. Rev. Mr. Hunter has a warm place in the hearts of many Palmer people, who will rejoice at his good fortune.

Returning it will reach Palmer at 8 p. m. and make a short stop only, proceeding to Brattleboro. The present morning train for the south will be made up here instead of coming from Brattleboro, and returning will reach Palmer at 5.05 p. m. instead of 6, as at present, and will remain here over night. The train now arriving from the north at 6.50 p. m. will arrive at 6.45, and connect with the express for Boston.

About 115 attended the picnic of the Baptist Sunday school at Evergreen Park, State Line, Wednesday, and all had a most enjoyable time. In the afternoon there was a clambake, and ice cream for all. There were numerous sports, and some wonderful records were established. In the 200-yards dash Daniel Buskey was the winner; he also won the 100-yards dash, the timers giving 10 seconds as correct; later in the day Ezra Kempton ran against this time and the timers gave his time as 9 seconds; the 50-yards dash for girls was won by Lillian Kempton; running high jump, Fred Gunn; standing high jump, Arthur Wells; a ball game between nines captained by C. E. Fuller and E. B. Taylor was won by the latter, 11 to 10.

Night Officer Murphy made his first arrest last Friday evening, and in the district court Saturday morning John Woods was sent to the house of correction for two months for having been drunk. Margaret Sullivan of Monson was charged with keeping an unlicensed dog, and the case will be heard tomorrow. Chamberlain of Three Rivers was tried for illegally selling a parlor organ leased him by Shaw Brothers, and the case will be continued July 5th. On Tuesday Frederick Turner of Maine was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for two years for vagrancy. He was given but one year at first, but the court found on looking up his record that he had been sent up in 1890 for drunkenness, and again a year ago for vagrancy, and concluded that if his visits were to be periodical time could be saved by a two years' sentence. This morning William Colgrove was placed on probation until July 28th for drunkenness.

The examination for admission to the high school was conducted this year on a plan different from any heretofore employed. Each pupil was given a numbered envelope in which was placed his or her name and post office address, and it was then sealed. The envelope number was placed on all the papers, and no pupil's name was known until after all the papers had been read and rated, thus insuring absolute fairness and impartiality. The examination rated half, and the year's study mark half, the requirement for admission being 70 per cent, no study to be below 50 per cent. Fifty-one tried the examination, and the following passed: Joseph F. Shiel, William Holden, John E. Leonard, Maud Kinnevan, Willie Carr, Anna M. Collis, Sadie M. Whiting, Jessie E. Whiting, Mary A. Duffy, Frank S. Keith, Nellie McMahon, Bertha M. Cross. Sixteen failed in one or two studies, and will be reëxamined Tuesday, August 28th. Much of the failure was due to carelessness, and twenty-three of the scholars must study another year. This is the first time that the year's work has ever been considered; its effect on the grammar school scholar will be very marked. The new class to the high school will probably be one of the best equipped that ever entered.

Rev. Mr. Moulton's Second Pastoral Sermon.

Rev. H. F. Moulton of St. Paul's Universalist church delivered his second annual pastoral sermon last Sunday morning. His subject was "Our Duties to Each Other as Minister and People," taking for his text, "Wherefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you do ye even so to them." St. Matt. vii: 12. He said in part:

This Golden Rule should temper all our words and actions. Especially in a relationship like that which exists between a Christian minister and a Christian people. If each party concerned in such a relationship recognizes and applies this Christian principle, mutual love, sweet peace and all good works will be among the results of the union. I justify the adoption of my theme to us on the ground that it is wise at least once every year to review some of our duties to each other, to be sure that no one through forgetfulness shall be unmindful of them. The duty of a minister to be a manly man is of vital importance to his influence and work. He should be honest, true, loving, and morally pure as far as possible. Fortunate is any people that has a manly minister,—and they are not uncommon,—a minister of whom they can say, as Pilate said of Christ: "Behold the Man." Another duty of the minister to his people is careful preparation for the public services of the church. This preparation is of two kinds, intellectual and spiritual. Still another duty of the minister to his people is pastoral care, which includes calls for acquaintance, on the sick, in hours of sorrow, for consultation, that tax the conversational, sympathetic, and tactful powers of every pastor. A duty which a minister owes to his flock if he is to be truly a Good Shepherd, knowing his sheep and known by them. Again it is the duty of a minister to have a wise oversight over all of the affairs of the church. He should be familiar with the financial standing of his church. He should be in the work of his church no less than what they call the practical man in a cotton or woolen mill.

The people have quite as many duties to their minister as their minister has to them. One duty of a people to their minister is for them to realize that he is human, like the men and women to whom he ministers. They should respect and honor him as a man among men, who is trying to exemplify reasonably well the manhood of Jesus Christ.—Another duty of the people to their minister is to attend reasonably the services of the church. People can do much to make the matter and manner of a preacher's sermons and addresses more scholarly and graceful if he expects and sees a goodly sized audience at the Sunday and week-day services. Again it is the duty of the people to their minister to cooperate with him in work. Put the best minister possible into a parish field and unless there are human minds and hearts, feet and hands, to cooperate with him the harvest will be nothing. Still again it is the duty of the people not to be over-critical of their minister. It seems easier for some people to point out the faults of human nature than to point out the good qualities; these persons would criticise an angel from heaven. Such over-criticisms cause church quarrels, over which the devil of worldliness laughs and grows fat. The following report of the year's work was made: Sermons preached, 45; addresses made, 5; funerals attended, 14; weddings, 1; persons received into the church, 13; children baptized, 10; new places for pastoral calls, 16; pastoral calls, 311.

The New Bicycle Law.

Persons who have thought that bicycle riding on the sidewalks should be prohibited will no doubt be pleased with the new law regarding such things which has been passed by the Legislature, and which will go into effect on the 14th of next month. There are only three points aimed at in the bill, the regulating of the speed of wheelmen, prohibition of sidewalk riding, and providing a suitable alarm for each wheel. This has been done in a way which gives the bicyclists a fair showing, and all reasonable riders are satisfied with the bill. Heretofore cross-country riders have been much annoyed by the vast difference in the regulations of the several cities and towns through which they must pass. One would have a speed limit of 8 miles an hour, another one of 10, while still another allowed 12. One town would allow sidewalk riding in any section of it, another in certain sections only, and still another not at all. In the matter of equipment the regulations were by no means uniform, for while most places outside the cities took no notice of this point, some required bells on the machines, some brakes, and some both bells and brakes. The new law regulates all these points, and all a rider need do is to provide a bell for his or her machine, steer clear of the sidewalks and keep the speed down to 10 miles and hour. The bill is as follows:

SECTION 1. Whoever, without the permit provided for in section three of this act, rides in a public highway or town way, street, square or park, a bicycle or tricycle at a rate of speed exceeding ten miles an hour, or rides such machine on a sidewalk or rides such machine in the streets, squares or parks of any city when the same is not provided with a suitable alarm bell adapted for use by the rider, or after sunset rides the same in any public way, square or park, whether within or without the limits of a city, when such machine is not provided with such suitable alarm bell, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding twenty dollars for each offence, and shall be further liable for all damages occasioned to any person by such unfawful act.

SECT. 2. The term "sidewalk," as used in this act, shall mean any sidewalk laid out as such by a city, town or fire district, and any walk in a city or village which is reserved by custom for the use of said pedestrians, or which has been specially prepared for their use. It shall not include cross walks, nor shall it include foot paths on portions of public ways lying outside of the thickly settled parts of cities and towns which are worn only by travel and are not improved by such cities or towns or by abutters. The terms "bicycle" and "tricycle," as used in this act, shall be deemed to include all vehicles propelled by the person riding the same, by foot or by hand power. The term "park" and "square," as used in this act, shall not include any spaces under the control of park commissioners, or of a park board or a special park department of a town or city having power to make regulations relative to such spaces, and this act shall not in any way abridge the powers of such commissioners, board or department.

SECT. 3. The mayor of a city or selectman of a town may in their discretion, upon any special occasion grant permits to any person or persons to ride such machines, during a specified time, upon specified portions of the public ways of such city or town, at any rate of speed, and may annex such other reasonable conditions to such permits as they shall deem proper. The city council of a city and the selectmen of a town may also, under such conditions as they shall deem proper, permit the use of velocipedes or other similar machines by children on any sidewalk in any public way, square or park in such city or town.

SECT. 4. Proceedings for the enforcement of the penalties imposed by this act shall be instituted within sixty days from the time the offence is committed.

SECT. 5. No city or town shall have any power to make any ordinance, by-law, or regulation respecting the use of bicycles or tricycles, except as provided in section three of this act; and, except as provided in said section three, no ordinance, by-law or regulation heretofore or hereafter made by a city or town in respect to bicycles or tricycles shall have any force or effect.
